Integrity

Our preferred building material.

James V. Zizzi grew up in the company of trusted builders. They were his family. Unlike them he tried his hand at other things. But very much like them he found some innate pleasure in building things. So, in 1976 he turned all his attention to his first love, and began building custom homes and his business on the East End. His approach to both his clients and his employees was the same. Be honest. Be fair. Be caring. And be open. It wasn't enough to be known as a builder of fine homes. More importantly he wanted to be known as a builder his family would be proud of.

Some builders walk you through a home they've built and point to all the exotic building materials they've used. James V. Zizzi prefers the longest lasting building material there is.

To make the best

Citron Martini

in the world, start with Grey Goose Le Citron.

In 2001, the Beverage Testing Institute of Chicago conducted a blind taste test of the world's top lemon flavored vodkas. They awarded points based on smoothness, nose and taste. After careful consideration, Grey Goose Le Citron was rated the number one lemon tasting vodka. Praised for its "exceptionally smooth... medium body" and "very clean finish," Le Citron is the best tasting vodka in the world infused with the light zest of fresh lemon.

The Down Factory Store

"Fall" Extravaganza

Thanks to our retail and "online" customers we are one of the largest resources for goose down comforters, pillows and featherbeds. Consumers that compare our quality and prices to those of department stores, discounters, catalogs and other web sites find that we are indeed unbeatable - and we guarantee that! Know the facts of down before you buy.

FACT: Down comes from the chest of the bird to keep it insulated from the weather. Feathers (those things with quills) come from the back of the bird to keep it dry. Down can cost as much as $10.00 an ounce, feathers 10¢ an ounce. Over 90% of down manufacturers find it to their advantage to add over 30% feathers to their down. It's like buying three pounds of ground sirloin and getting two pounds of meat and one pound of fat. You have paid for meat and got fat, it's the same with their down, they both do it because it's legal. We do not contaminate our down by adding feathers to it.

KNOW THE FACTS BEFORE YOU BUY IT

FACT: Fill power, this is the amount the cubic inches filled by one ounce of down. Higher fill power means a higher quality down. You will find that as the quality of the down increases, so does the comfort & life of the item.

FACT: We use only high thread count, baffle box construction, 100% cotton covers on our down comforters & pillows. Down insulates by trapping air and holding in your body temperature, keeping you comfortable through the night. Low quality comforters are usually heavier because it takes more of an inferior down to fill a comforter. Inferior down becomes clumpy and it can't breath, resulting in your becoming over heated and uncomfortable. Our high quality down gives you the warmth and comfort without the weight.

FACT: In all likelihood you will have your comforter longer than the car you are now driving.

"We go the distance for you."

Beer Promotion

RACE TO THE HAMPTONS Gets High Nielsen Ratings

By Dan Rattiner

The beer promotion "Fastest Man to the Hamptons" took place last Friday night and turned out to be as big a disaster as everyone predicted. Three people are in Lenox Hill or Southampton Hospital with various injuries, one of which is critical, one person is missing out over the Atlantic with a search still underway by the Coast Guard, and a total of four participants have been arrested on various charges. In addition, a lawsuit was filed by the Women's Action group because of it, with papers already served in a Manhattan courtroom.

"It may have not worked out exactly as we planned," said a spokesman for the promoter, Roaring Rocket Beer. "But all in all, we are pleased with it. It gained us a great deal of publicity which we would otherwise not have gotten. At least that is our position at this time."

The promotion began at 8 p.m. on Friday evening with a nautical flare fired over the East River, illegally as it turned out. (Roaring Rocket Beer was given several summonses.) When it was fired, seventeen men around the city took off, some of them literally, for the Montauk Lighthouse. Whoever got there first would win a lifetime supply of Roaring Rocket Beer, a newcomer to this City. Whether Roaring Rocket Beer succeeds or fails remains to be seen. There is little doubt that this race failed.

Representatives of Roaring Rocket Beer, half an hour earlier, had explained the rules to the seventeen entrants with the cameras of an independent filming company whirring away. It is exactly 133 miles from Columbus Circle in Manhattan to the exact center of the flashing light of the Montauk Lighthouse. A map of the city was displayed at Columbus Circle, showing the entire length of Manhattan, the Bronx and Staten Island, with a slightly curved line through it. At exactly that point, wherever you were in the city, you were 133 miles from that flashing light. The first entrant to climb the stairs of the Lighthouse and touch the casing of the light at the very top would win the prize. Watch for the 8 p.m. start flare.

"We told them we were not cooperating in any way with this event," said Richard Blackheist, who is Chairman of the Montauk Heritage Society, which owns the Montauk Lighthouse. "We wrote them letters. Roaring Rocket Beer and the marketing firm representing them. We told them no one had ever contacted us and if they had, we would have rejected the event. We never received a reply."

And so it was that at 9 p.m., in the darkness of last Friday night, Blackheist and four members of the Society went to the Lighthouse, locked themselves in, bolted the door, and went up to a conference room on the second floor to make sure nobody came to touch the top of the Montauk Lighthouse. There they remained for the rest of the night, watching TV, specifically — to their amazement — a network that was showing the very event as it was going on at the time. It was live. And it was in progress. The name of the show, a special, was RACE TO THE HAMPTONS.

...the co-winners would each receive all the beer they could drink for half a lifetime, whatever that meant.

"I really had trouble believing what I was seeing," a bleary-eyed Blackheist said the next morning. "Roaring Rocket Beer had sold the promotion."

At the start of the show, there were introductions, a few commercials, and then exactly one minute of footage for each of the contestants. It had all actually happened simultaneously, the announcer said, but viewers could watch each man one at a time as film crews piped footage of them into the network headquarters to an editing room where the clips could be strung together. There were thus twelve minutes of men in New York City literally taking off for the Hamptons, most of them anyway. There were twelve minutes of commercials, and there were apparently supposed to be five minutes at the Montauk Lighthouse at the end, though there was none because of the bar-the-door decision by the Society. Instead, the end featured an interview with Wesley Kneivel, a daredevil nephew of Evel Kneivel, who is currently working as a stunt motorcyclist in Las Vegas. He was at the Roulette Hotel, with a banner for Roaring Rocket Beer waving behind him.

Entrant One was Kenny Noblich of Englewood, New Jersey, who, when the flare went off, ran to a twin engine Beechcraft parked at the end of the runway at Teterboro Airport and got in. He was wearing a parachute. The Beechcraft took off and disappeared into the night. Noblich was a cook at a nearby Pizza Hut, Kneivel said. He would parachute down to the Lighthouse.

Entrant Two was a businessman, Alan Franklin, who appeared at a boat slip in the Battery at the very tip of Manhattan. He worked on Wall Street, he said. He would take his hydrofoil out into the Atlantic and drive it at a top speed of 93 miles an hour to a beach on the north side of the Lighthouse where he would leap out and run up to the front door and climb the stairs. He, too, disappeared into the night.

Entrant Three was another businessman, Bill Frisle, who stood in Central Park on the Great Lawn, with a rocket pack on his back that, he said, came from the New York Museum of Design. It was the very pack demonstrated at the New York World's Fair at the GM Building in 1939 and it was still in working order. He had tested it. He had made a six-figure donation to the museum to get the use of the pack. With the appearance of the flare, he flipped a switch, a jet inside the pack spewed flames out the back, after which Frisle slid across the grass and then began rolling on the ground in pain trying to get the pack off. Eventually, he got the flames to go out, and after that an ambulance arrived and paramedics took him to Lenox Hill Hospital, where he is reportedly in serious but stable condition with third degree burns on his buttocks.

There was Alvin Wreckstein, an employee of the Ringling Brothers & Barnum and Bailey Circus, who had himself shot out of a cannon that had been hastily brought out into Union Square on the back of a flatbed truck. The flare went off. And with a great bang, Wreckstein headed out over the East River. He remains missing, and police believe he overshot the mark and landed out at sea beyond the cliffs of Montauk somewhere. A search is underway.

There were all sorts of other entrants. There was the motorcyclist who left from Bruckner Boulevard in the Bronx, saying that by zipping at high speeds down the "slot," which he described as the small space between the right lane and the passing lane, he could get to Montauk in under two hours.

There was a bartender from the Upper East Side who took off in a Sikorski helicopter from the pad on top of the Met Life Building in midtown Manhattan.

And there was John Kane, who took a giant hot air balloon up from the southern tip of Staten Island. Announcing he had done it before, he said he would drift northeast in the Gulf Stream and win the contest hands down. He was last seen flying low over Lake Ronkonkoma about halfway Long Island, around midnight. A fog rolled in and he was seen no more.

Probably the most bizarre entry was that of Angie Brooks, a man who said he worked at the Edison Lab in Menlo Park and had invented a particle beam machine. Brooks entered the machine, which was set in Strawberry Fields in front of the Dakota, just as the flare went into the sky. What appeared to be a smoke bomb then exploded. And suddenly the camera was filming in Montauk where he emerged from an identical machine the Heritage Society people had watched be set up in the parking lot, just to the west of the Lighthouse earlier in the day. Police immediately arrested him and over his protests took him to the East Hampton Town Police Annex in downtown Montauk where he was detained. Teams of scientists with cotton balls, both in the parking lot and on Strawberry Fields, simultaneously swabbed the inside of the "time machines" for DNA. By morning, of course, it was found that they didn't match. The gentleman in Montauk, who continued to insist he was Angie Brooks, was charged with fraud.

The first to arrive at the front door of the Montauk Lighthouse was Kenny Noblich, who

Special Bargain Garment From Banana Republic Factory Store Available

· By Dan Rattiner

Everybody loves a bargain. Over Columbus Day weekend, the Tanger Mall in Riverhead was mobbed with people, all shopping away, taking advantage of the discounts and the extra special sales. A part of Tanger is a factory mall. You can get really good things, from Pacific Sun, Nike, Farberware and Banana Republic, things which the factory has rejected off the assembly line — a thread is out of place, a sleeve is an eighth of an inch too long — and taken to Tanger. Just get rid of them, the Nike people say to the people who run the factory outlets. There's nothing really wrong with them.

My best bargain of the day came from Banana Republic. I wear chino pants. They had a rack of beige chino pants on sale down from $49.99 to $19.99. And on top of that, they were having a twenty percent off sale because it was Columbus Day. I wondered if they had my size. This would REALLY be a bargain.

My size is 36" x 30", which roughly translates to a little thick around the middle with short legs. It's a common size. I flipped through the rack and there it was. 36" waist by 30" inseam. My size. I flipped further through the rack. It was the only one.

In four large bounds, I was over to the line at checkout. There were six excited shoppers there, all holding various garments in their hands and breathing heavily. I got on the end of the line. It might take a half of an hour. I'd wait.

I had gotten a very excellent pair of brand new pants, for just nine dollars. Who cared if they didn't fit?

But it didn't take any half of an hour. There were four checkout people with headphones and nametags at the register, and a woman with a clipboard that kept everybody orderly on the line. I got up to the front in about six minutes and slipped the pants toward her. I also slid over my credit card.

"May I have your zip code?" she asked.

Aha, I thought, they are doing a survey on where everybody has come from. I gave her mine. 11937. And she wrote it down.

Then she smoothed out the pants and my next thought was, gee, the legs seem rather long, maybe I should have tried them on? Nah. Anyway, I took the pants — she was quite patient about this — and held them against my leg and indeed they seemed just fine at 30". I had seen some sort of optical illusion. I put them back and we went ahead with the sale.

She aimed the price gun at the price tag and it rang up $24.17, which is what I had thought it would be. Then she rang in further discounts, including a 10% discount that she apparently got from a sign in front of the register, which read,

ASK ME ABOUT A FURTHER 10% DISCOUNT, and then she gave me the final cost.

Frankly I have no idea how she got to that. But I wasn't going to ask. A special thrill went through me, the shopping thrill, and I patted my credit card and smiled. And she rang it up. She then carefully folded the pants up and put them in a plastic bag that read Banana Republic on the side. And then she threw in some crinkly wrapping paper. And I went home.

"Look what I got for nine dollars," I told my significant other, holding up the plastic bag with the words Banana Republic on it. "Pants."

"How do you like that," she said.

Later that evening, my mother called.

"I got a new pair of pants at Banana Republic," I told her, "and guess how much I paid for them?"

She guessed. Wrong. Imagine that.

The next morning, I put on the pair of pants to go to work. The length was correct. I pulled them over my hips and went to button them. This was not 36". There were about six inches more to go when it got as far as it could. The pants had to be a 30" x 30". I looked at the fabric tag inside the back. It read 36" x 30". I looked at the price tag, still attached to the belt loop. 36" x 30". Could it be that because it said 36" x 30", they had pulled it off the assembly line?

I said nothing. I had gotten a very excellent pair of brand new pants, for just nine dollars. Who cared if they didn't fit? They'd fit somebody. I have one son who is six- foot four inches and another son who is six-foot even. Both are slim. They would fit one of them. I put the pants in a drawer and put on something else.

That evening after dinner, I gingerly broached the topic. "I wouldn't wear chinos for a million dollars," Mr. six-footer said.

"I wear a 32 x 36," said Mr. Six-foot four.

The next day, I considered driving to Riverhead with the nine dollar pants to see if they would take them back. What a ridiculous idea. It would cost more in gas than they were worth, to drive them to Riverhead. Well, that's considering them to be nine dollar pants, not $49.99 pants, which is what they really are. And anyway, I LIKE the pants.

I thought of putting the pants in the box where I keep the mementos of my life. My report card from third grade is in there. A toy MIG fighter plane I bought in East Berlin is in there. I have a piece of the Berlin Wall in there. Nah.

Eventually, I put the pants back in the plastic bag, put them in my car and the next day, went to Banana Republic, not in Riverhead, but at the Bridgehampton Mall just a mile from my office. This is not a factory-store Banana Republic. This is an upscale Banana Republic where pretty girls with name tags look at you admiringly when you come in the front door and fight with one another about who is going to take care of you. They were really glad to see me.

What I really want, I told them, was an exchange. These 30" by 30" pants, clearly mismarked at the factory as 36" x 30", in exchange for an ACTUAL pair of pants that were ACTUALLY 36" x 30".

"It was your mistake," I said. "The label is right there, wrong. Just measure the waist. You'll see."

They declined to do any measuring. They said the pants were in a style they don't make anymore, and they offered me nine dollars. I declined.

Frankly, I am very proud to own a pair of $49.99 retail pair of pants from Banana Republic that I got for nine dollars. What a bargain! I'm thinking I will have them bronzed. Or maybe just framed, with the tag showing, so I can display them over the fireplace mantel in my study. I could laminate the receipt and put it in the frame alongside them

"See," I would say to visitors, "these are the pants I got for nine dollars at Banana Republic."

The truth is that the pleasure I have gotten from this bargain has been considerable. Worth every penny of it. But now it is over, I am moving on and what I am stuck with is this pair of pants that I have to do something with.

Anybody have a friend, a kid or an adult, who is 30" x 30" who wouldn't mind taking a pair of pants off me? Just stop by the office in Bridgehampton. First come, first served. Absolutely free. Maybe you could bring me a gift acknowledgment for "pants worth $9" and I could use it to take something off my income tax.

Every little bit helps. •

The Underrated Item Sticking Out Of Your Face That Never Quits

By Dan Rattiner

"So, sit down Mr. Ansbarger."

"Thank you, Doctor."

"I got the results of the tests done on your nose. And I'm sorry to say it's not good news. Why didn't you come here before?"

"I guess I thought it would go away."

"If you came here six months ago, we could have done something. Now it's too late. I'm sorry to tell you this but you only have six months to live."

This is a tribute to noses. You never, well, almost never, hear about a conversation like the one above. Of all the parts of our bodies, the nose gives us the fewest problems. People do not die because of an illness to the nose. They die from something else. And then, they lie there on the slab in the morgue and sticking out in front of them is a perfectly healthy nose, ready to carry on. The rest of our parts may have shriveled away, but the nose remains. Healthy and strong. Ready to go.

It is particularly of note, this business about the nose, because all through your life, your nose is out there in front of you, sticking out, the very first thing in harm's way were trouble to come. Trouble comes. The nose takes a hit. It bends. It snaps back to its original shape. Life goes on.

Isn't it interesting that in professional prize fighting, you almost never hear of a fight being stopped because of an injury to the nose.

"Oh, the nose is bleeding now. I think Palooka may have broken it."

But the fight goes on. On the other hand, a relatively small cut, maybe an inch, just over the eye, and there is the referee waving his arms, ending the thing. Can't have that.

There are Institutes for the advancement of the prevention of diseases to the liver. There are Institutes for heart disease. Institutes where people are trying to find cures for emphysema. There are no Institutes for illnesses to the nose. There is not even anything called noseitis. I don't even know of a book about illnesses to the nose.

> "I got the results of the tests done on your nose. And I'm sorry to say it's not good news."

And surely we take our noses for granted. We never complain about them in any serious way. Or hardly ever. There's never a fear that a pain in the nose could be the first indication of Hodgkin's disease. Or the first indication of Lou Gehrig's disease. I mean no offense by this. You don't see people standing silently and sadly around a hospital bed staring down at a person who is gravely ill with something wrong with his nose.

parachuted down lightly onto the grounds of the Lighthouse, just twenty-two minutes and thirty-six seconds after the firing of the flare. Upon finding the door locked, he pounded on it for awhile, thorougly scaring those within, and then turned around to face Jason Edwards, the well-known New York City radio traffic reporter for WXKK, who had set off from the rooftop of the West Side bus terminal in a helicopter with a sheet covering the radio station logo, and who had landed on the lighthouse lawn just eleven seconds behind Noblich.

Edwards and Noblich began shouting and shoving one another and were soon arrested by police who charged them with disturbing the peace, and took them too down to the Annex.

At the end of the half hour, in spite of everything, these two individuals were declared co-winners by Kneivel, since no one had been able to breach the bastion that was the interior of the Montauk Lighthouse. At that point, on TV, the president of Roaring Rocket Beer appeared with two plaques and announced that the co-winners would each receive all the beer they could drink for half a lifetime, whatever that meant. The awards were received in absentia, of course. Both contestants were in jail. No other entrants arrived during the rest of the half hour show, although according to Blackheist, several did arrive to the locked front door after that, the last of them at 4:30 a.m.

The lawsuit was filed the next day by the Women's Action group at City Hall in Manhattan on Monday morning. No woman participated in RACE TO THE HAMPTONS. And two that applied were turned down. As of this writing, Alan Wreckson remains missing. The network plans to have a follow up program in two weeks, which will be a reunion of all the participants, whether in bandages, on crutches or whatever, at Cipriani on 42nd Street. At that time, if he is still missing, there will be a memorial service for Alan Wreckson.

RACE scored a 9.3 Nielsen on Friday night in its time slot. It beat out Fox's AFRICAN SURVIVOR, which scored a 7.7 and it beat out ME, MYSELF AND ARLENE on Channel 4 which scored a 7.4. The Montauk Lighthouse will be open as usual for this time of year, weekends from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Or visit their website at montauklighthouse.com. •

They put those tubes in very carefully, someone says. As it gets worse, they won't even be able to do that. How horrible.

Maybe the reason for this, the VERY reason for this, is that it is out front of you all the time. Because of that, people are very quick to point out anything they see going on with a nose.

You have a sort of big red zit on your nose, somebody will say. It's said easily and breezily. No big problem. You got a thing hanging off your nose. Here. Let me get it.

Doctors would go broke waiting for patients if their specialty was limited to just the nose. Nobody would come in. So doctors who treat noses bunch them in with other parts. They become doctors of eye, ear, nose and throat. Somewhere in there, there is something wrong. But very likely it is not the nose. Maybe with the eye, ear and throat. But certainly not the nose.

Noses are so healthy that in plastic surgery, the easiest job to do is the nose job. They can reconstruct a chin. They can enlarge a breast. They can straighten your teeth or correct a thing where your ears stick out, but these are complicated, difficult procedures. With the nose, it's just in and out. Put a bandage over it. Pat you on the back. Send you home. Take a few aspirins for a few days.

One of the greatest scenes in film is toward the end of the Woody Allen movie Sleeper, where the Great Leader has died and his followers decide they are going to restore him to life by making a clone from his nose. The nose, perfectly healthy, has been removed from the body of the Great Leader and stored in a refrigerator. In the climactic scene, it is brought out and placed on an operating table and hooked up to all sorts of monitors, wires and tubes. A crowd is on hand, standing in the balcony, to witness this historic moment, and the cloning begins. Ten seconds go by and then Woody Allen in a lab coat comes running in, pursued by four security guards, and he knocks over the operating table and tangles up all the tubes and knocks over all the jars of formaldehyde. The cloning is a disaster, and Allen runs off, still being chased by the security guards. Nobody can catch him. And everybody stands around staring at this big mess.

But if people are worried about all the chemicals and tubes, nobody is worried about the nose. Somebody could pick it up and put it in his pocket and carry it off. Send in a kidnap note. One million dollars or we kill the nose. Nobody would pay a dime. Noses last. And everybody knows it. •

Meet The Scallops

Their Eyes Are Where The Mouth Goes – Got No Feet And Got No Toes

By Joe Mintzer

First, let's get a few things straight. A scallop is not a clam. Not an oyster either. A member of the shellfish family? Yes. But a very different one. It has "eyes." Beautiful blue eyes. Light sensitive enough to warn it of predators before it squirts off to safety. Anatomically, it's a bit odd because its eyes are also where its lips are. Not a bad arrangement though, considering its other body parts are pretty tightly packed. Which brings us to the next question. Is a scallop "bi?" A bivalve? Yup. But, I mean (no tales out of school) is the creature "bi-sexual" — able to adjust happily to circumstances, that is? Stuart Vorphal, a bayman numero uno, says he never bothered to look into that. "It's their business, none of mine." But Bob Valentine, a marine biologist who, with wife Marie, runs Multi-aquaculture (The Fish Farm in Amagansett), says it's the same old story of sperm and egg. There are "he" scallops and "she" scallops. When a scallop spawns, it releases millions of eggs which become larvae that, after a while, grow up, protected in the eelgrass of the bays and harbors, then "go to bottom" where they mostly filter-feed over their two-year lifespan, while they wait to be eaten by blue crabs, horseshoe crabs, blowfish, seagulls and people, after being dredged up by scallopers working in small boats in all kinds of weather trying to make a living a very hard way. A Hobbesian prospect all the way around. But hey, what isn't? You know, nasty, brutish, short.

Now the luscious bivalves sell in some markets here for as much as $45 a pound.

Been that way for who knows how long. Except every now and then, something really catastrophic happens. Like in the twenties and thirties, Vorpahl says, when the eelgrass died and the larvae, tiny as grains of sand, died with it. The cycle took its time to come back and did, and then around 1980, whammo, for ten years a brown tide from Peconic Bay, an algae invasion, moved into every body of water out here, Napeague Bay, Three Mile Harbor, Northwest Harbor, smothering every stream and creek, which is where the scallopers found themselves, up-the...! So where there once were eighty scallop boats out in Three Mile Harbor, for example, there were soon only a handful. And where there once

Baykeeper Banished

County Committee On Mosquito Control Doesn't Like What He Has To Say

By Jerry Cimisi

Peconic Baykeeper Kevin McAllister was blunt as to why his vote was removed from a committee formed by the Suffolk County Legislature to study the question of mosquito drainage ditches in wetlands. During a phone interview from his office in Riverhead, McAllister said, "From the beginning I've challenged the county's policies on spraying and ditching. Wetland ditching conveys upland source pollutants and leads to extensive drainage. In some cases, wetlands are being drained to the extent that in five or ten years, some of them will no longer be protected wetlands, and potentially could have houses built on them."

McAllister said that wetlands provide "important biofiltration, functioning as the kidneys of the bay. They not only filter tidal waters but also the freshwater that drains into the bay."

Suffolk County doesn't dispute McAllister's protestation that he was stripped of his voting rights on a Technical Advisory Committee because of his views. Vito Minei, Director of the Division of Environmental Quality for the Suffolk County Department of Health Services, said, "The purpose of this committee is to evaluate all alternatives for controlling mosquitoes, managing wetlands and monitoring public health for exposure from pesticides."

He added that this had to be done impartially, with "scientific objectivity," and "since Mr. McAllister has already made up his mind on the issue, it has been pointed out that this is a conflict of interest."

Kevin McAllister

Minei said it was another committee member, attorney Michael Kaufman, who first raised this point.

The fact that McAllister has filed suit against the county for its practices apparently also figured in this decision. Though as Mr. Minei said, "Mr. McAllister is still allowed to come to committee meetings and air his views."

Minei maintains, "This present study is to evaluate if this is indeed the case and to decide, based on what we gather, how to proceed. But to do this we have to remain open-minded, remain unbiased. Mr. McAllister isn't unbiased."

Last year, the county formed a special committee to study the effects of mosquito spraying and ditching of wetlands. Since the arrival — and subsequent spread — of the West Nile virus in North America in 1999, there has been increased pesticide spraying for mosquitoes in many parts of the country, especially in New York City and on Long Island.

The object of draining wetlands is obvious: less standing water, fewer mosquitoes. But, as McAllister says, "Mosquito control activities have always been about 'nuisance control.' With greater public scrutiny of these activities, the county now refers to it as 'disease prevention,' which implies the county is responding to current health concerns, when in fact it's the same old pest management program — it's more about people's comfort levels than any threats to health. There is no real proof that mosquito control activities are effective in reducing mosquito populations. Suffolk County is capitalizing on the West Nile hysteria, and spraying pesticides may cause more health problems than West Nile itself."

Last year the county formed a Steering Committee on the matter. Connected to that committee were the Citizens Advisory Committee (CAC) and the Technical Advisory Committee (TAC). McAllister was appointed to the TAC by the CAC, principally because of his environmental background spanning twenty years as a natural resource manager. He holds degrees in Marine Biology, Natural Resource Conservation and a Master of Science in Coastal Zone Management. McAllister had begun attending the committee's meetings last autumn.

He said, "This past July, Mr. Kaufman raised the issue that because I had brought suit against the county, there might be a legal question about my being on the committee. Mr. Kaufman serves on Suffolk County's Council on Environmental Quality, and is also on the Technical Advisory Committee — without scientific credentials."

On two separate occasions, the TAC sought legal opinion on McAllister's dilemma. Before a decision was made, the Steering Committee unilaterally removed his voting rights this October.

McAllister said, "Suffolk County is trying to protect the charade they've initiated: the practices and budget for Vector Control (a division of the county Department of Health). Suffolk County Legislature allocated $3.6 million for an Environmental Impact Study (EIS) to look at the impacts to marine life and critically important wetlands. Regretfully, it has become quite apparent that the study is being steered in a direction so as to avoid the rigorous analysis of the impacts to living resources."

"Cashman Associates, a longtime consultant for the county, is actually performing the study. This contract was awarded without competitive pricing and independent review. Not only that, but critical field studies were eliminated in favor of new departmental staffing, vehicles and equipment," McAllister added.

Outlining the core of his suit against the county, McAllister stated he believes the county is in violation of the State Environmental Quality Review Act (SEQRA). SEQRA requires an environmental impact study if there is a potential for any significant environmental impact arising out of any project. "Suffolk County continues to ignore the most fundamental elements of SEQRA, that is, when such potentials exist, the project may not proceed until these impacts have been thoroughly analyzed through the EIS process. The county continues to ditch and spray, and has silenced a voice raising environmental concerns ."

McAllister says it is the county that is biased. "[Suffolk County's] Council on Environmental Quality and the County Legislature has determined there are no significant environmental impacts with the present program. They are making this determination without a comprehensive study. Their bias is a dangerous one."

At any rate, McAllister feels he has ample evidence for his "bias." He cites an incident on August 12, 2001, when hundreds of young flounder and thousands of shrimp and crabs were killed in Flanders Bay as a result of the county's application of an insecticide Scourge.

He also claims testimony from two local baymen who found dead crabs after they observed aerial spraying. Crabs and lobsters are closely related to insects and so can be adversely affected by pesticides. In addition, deaths of hibernating spotted turtles in January 2000 at the Napeague marsh are documented; their deaths are a result of the heavy equipment used for mosquito ditching.

The position of Peconic Baykeeper was created out of the Waterkeeper Alliance, a program overseen by Robert F. Kennedy, Jr. The Alliance serves as an umbrella for about 120 individual Keeper programs, originating from a coalition of private interests and individuals who banded together to fight and reverse the pollution of the Hudson River.

Vito Minei said that no one has taken McAllister's place on the Technical Advisory Committee. He could not say just how many people were on any of the committees at the present time, though he said there is a representative from the presiding officer of the Suffolk County Legislature, Maxine Postal, on the Steering Committee, as well as a representative from the Department of Health Services.

The Peconic Baykeeper has filed suit that Suffolk County is in violation of the State Environmental Quality Review Act. The county tried to have the suit dismissed on the grounds that the Baykeeper could not bring the suit. "We won that round," said McAllister. "The court ruled we could."

The suit will be heard in New York State Supreme Court. The Peconic Baykeeper is being represented by Pace Environmental Litigation Clinic located in White Plains. Run by Karl Coplan and Robert F. Kennedy, Jr., the Clinic is an outgrowth of Pace University's Law School, with students serving the Clinic's environmental litigants.

McAllister said, "I can't remain silent while the county steers the study in a direction to avoid a hard look at the environmental impacts. The process is a charade and I'm blowing the whistle on it." •

Steven Spielberg
Film Director

By Dan Rattiner

Steven Spielberg grew up in southern California and Arizona, graduating from Arcadia High School in Phoenix. His father Arnold was an electrical engineer and his mother Leah was a former concert pianist. He applied to USC but was rejected, and so spent the next three years at Long Beach State, leaving in 1967 to follow his career path, which was filmmaking.

In the late 1960s, America was going through a time of rebellion and change, and among other things, for the first time,it was possible to make home movies and films with a video camera. Spielberg made numerous short films during this time. When he was 13, he made a short western he called The Last Gun, and two years later he made Escape to Nowhere ,featuring kids as World War II soldiers. One of those acting in this film was his sister Anne. That same year, he made Battle Squad, another World War II epic that interspersed war footage with an airplane on the ground that was set up to appear as if it was flying. At 17, he produced and directed several full-length films, including Fireflight, about aliens invading a small town. By the time he left Long Beach State, he had produced and directed another full-length film as well, Slipstream, that, although never finished, earned him a seven year arrangement with Universal Films to make movies. And so he did.

Some say he is the greatest filmmaker of all time, and if he isn't he is very near the top of the list. He has received every honor imaginable for his work, and his films, to this day, provide hours of enjoyment to the lives of almost every one of us. Just last week, a group of us enjoyed a tape of the movie Jaws, starring Roy Scheider, which Spielberg directed when he was 29. He was young and inexperienced when he made that film. His prior filmmaking work for Universal before Jaws included a baffling movie called Duel with Dennis Weaver, made when he was 25, and a moderately successful film entitled The Sugarland Express with Goldie Hawn. He had also directed numerous TV shows, including episodes of Marcus Welby M. D., Rod Serling's Night Gallery and Columbo. He was up and coming.

Some say he is the greatest filmmaker of all time, and if he isn't he is very near the top of the list.

The Jaws assignment came to him after Robert Benchley wrote a riveting book by that name that became a best seller for almost a half a year in 1974. The setting for the book had been the Hamptons, with the Mayor of the place and the merchants here trying very hard not to let anyone know there was a monster shark eating tourists in the local waters. Spielberg came here, and he decided the Hamptons was too busy a place to make the film the way he wanted. He wanted a more desolate island. And so he moved the shoot to Martha's Vineyard.

Logistics were difficult there, the monster shark kept breaking down and the whole thing went way off schedule, but in the end Spielberg created an epic, a film that at the time brought in more revenue than any film ever made before. It was wonderful then, and it is wonderful today. Interestingly, today Spielberg lives in East Hampton just five miles away from the star of Jaws, Roy Scheider. About seven years ago, Spielberg tapped Scheider to star in a network series entitled SeaQuest DSV, about an underwater starship in the future patrolling the ocean in search of wrongdoers. The series lasted three years on NBC.

Spielberg bought a house in the early 1980s facing out on Georgica Pond in East Hampton with his then wife Amy Irving and their infant son, Max. By that time, his resume included Close Encounters of the Third Kind, Raiders of the Lost Ark, Poltergeist, E. T., and Indiana Jones and the Temple of Doom, all of which were blockbuster hits at theatres around the world.

During his time here, he has made only a few public appearances, preferring instead to lead a private life, at first with Amy Irving, and then, after 1989 when he and his first wife divorced, with Kate Capshaw, to whom he has been married for the last twelve years and with whom he has raised six children.

Spielberg has been moved to enter the public eye in the Hamptons on only three occasions, all of which have had a profound effect on the local community. In 1990, he gave the inaugural speech for the founding of the Hamptons Synagogue in Westhampton Beach. The building was blessed and a Torah, the book of laws, from a ruined Synagogue in Czechoslovakia, was unveiled and presented. Partially scorched and burned, it was a relic from the Holocaust, and had been hidden and thus saved over all those years. Today the Hampton Synagogue, led by Rabbi Marc Schneier, is one of the most prominent in the nation.

In 1992, Spielberg gave a speech about filmmaking at Guild Hall in East Hampton for the first year of the Hamptons International Film Festival. It is fair to say that that speech gave a stamp of authenticity to the fledgling festival, which is celebrating its 11th year this week, from Wednesday to Sunday, October 22-26. It might also be fair to say that Spielberg's arrival here heralded a dramatic migration of filmmaking people

INDUSTRIAL ROAD TO FAME

By Robin F. Smith

"As sure as I am that the sun is coming up tomorrow, this will work," says Frazer Dougherty, founder and president of East Hampton Studios (EHS), and he means business. Reports of the end of his plans and vision for a lively and successful movie studio in East Hampton seem to be greatly exaggerated. Since acquiring its Certificate of Occupancy in November 2000, EHS has booked 95 jobs. The studio has earned more in the past six months than in the previous two-and-a-half years, and if Dougherty has his way, that momentum will continue.

Formerly the Pinewood Studios East, Dougherty's vast property includes a soundstage large enough for five working sets (to be used one after another in succession), quarters to hold large production teams, dressing rooms for as many stars as you might need and offices fully wired for high-tech communications. What's missing? Nothing, except for that one big project to put EHS on the map.

East Hampton Film Studios

Dougherty is convinced it will happen, and he is passionate about the role that film and telecommunications will play in the future fiscal success of East Hampton. The exquisite backdrop, the dearth of local talent and the profusion of industry people with second homes in the Hamptons, all point to the logic of creating a full service filmmaking community right here.

Dougherty is keeping EHS as booked as possible while admitting there are still some roadblocks to overcome in making the money he needs until the idea catches on. Jack Nicholson, Diane Keaton and crew spent 45 days this summer at EHS shooting Something's Gotta Give which opens December 12, 2003. There is the possibility that a special preview of the film will be held on the property later this year. Jimmy Buffett recorded his latest CD at the studio, and last summer, the cast and crew of the indie film, Fallout, made EHS their home base, paying in cash with a promise of a chunk of future earnings.

"We need the support of the community to keep doing things like that. It's good for them, it's good for us and it's good for the filmmakers," he says.

While keenly aware that timing is everything, Dougherty insists that the glass is half full rather than half empty, as some in the media have portrayed it. He believes that special events such as concerts will benefit from the studios' superb acoustics and help to bolster it financially, while also supporting local artistic talent. Stressing that moviemaking is an art form as much as any other creative expression, Dougherty goes so far as to dream of an endowment, like those offered for fine arts institutions. In return for such support, EHS would be a consistent revenue stream for the Town.

Another impetus in building a production community on the East End is the opportunity to play a part in stemming the migration of film technical support talent, which has, of late, been jetting off to Canada, Australia and other foreign countries. Movie studios are in search of a cost break, geographical beauty and a steady stream of experienced crewmembers that are available when you need them. Dougherty believes that EHS could be a major factor in returning production dollars to the US, by taking advantage of what the area has to offer.

Plans for several large productions have fallen through recently, most notably Alec Baldwin's Devil and Daniel Webster as well as a film based on Peter Matthiesen's novel, Men's Lives that would have drawn together local talent in the form of Roy Scheider, Billy Joel and Sidney Lumet. Currently there are 12 pending film projects, and additional creative options that Dougherty is exploring. He believes that with the right support and commitment from the Town of East Hampton and Suffolk County, everything will fall into place. His conviction and determination are quite convincing, and it may be sooner rather than later that "Hollywood East" is the place for celebrities to make beautiful movies by the beach, instead of just looking beautiful by the beach.

East Hampton Studios is located at 75 Industrial Rd. in Wainscott. Phone: 631-537-6300 website:www.easthamptonstudios.com were commercial harvests of 300,000 pounds, they were down, last year, to 2500 pounds.

Well, the season started up again last week, and the hardiest of the hardy were out there — some still scalloping family-style, fathers and sons — the way it was when Vorpahl was a kid. He began his fisherman's life at the age of ten, when scallops went for fifty cents a pound, but that was when you could buy an oceanfront estate for a sandpiper's song. Now the luscious bivalves sell in some markets here for as much as $45 a pound.

So why the shortage? Another algae bloom? No, says Vorpahl. Eelgrass die-off? No, says Vorpahl. "Ask the man upstairs," he suggests. Fertilizer and other run-off? Maybe, says Valenti, adding a "who knows?" Or, Vorpahl thinks maybe it's the construction business. "The fellas could stay nice and dry, keep better hours and make more money bangin' nails and workin' houses," says this sixty-three-year-old veteran of the high seas and low water. (Hot water, too! Here's a sidebar worth noting. Seems that Vorpahl hasn't been fishing much in recent years. Been in court. Won't buy a commercial fishing license. Been arrested a couple of times. Won't plea bargain. Claims the Nicholls Patent of 1666 and the Dongan Patent of 1686, both issued by the Crown of England to the Town of East Hampton, gave jurisdiction over all fishing and hunting rights in perpetuity to the Town, thereby superceding any laws and restrictions subsequently imposed by the State of New York.)

Obviously, a man with much to say, so Vorpahl does. Like describing the hard work of opening scallops by hand — "Norwegian stream" he called it — because there is no other way to get to the creamy white "muscle" meat gourmet's prize. We were into the difference between sea and bay scallops (sea scallops are a lot bigger, nowhere near as sweet and much more plentiful and therefore cheaper than their bay cousins) — when Mrs. Vorpahl offered up her scallop recipe. Here it is:

Beat a couple of eggs
Dip the scallops in them
Roll in breadcrumbs
Oil some foil in a baking pan
Spread scallops about in the pan

Season with salt, pepper, and paprika, drizzle butter over it all.

Bake in 350 degree oven for twenty-minutes

A dish fit indeed for "The Man Upstairs". And for anyone who shows up at your dinner table. •

Authors Writing About The Hamptons

Author Wilfrid Sheed, three of whose novels have been nominated for the National Book Award, lives in North Haven. He wrote this short piece about the annual Artists &Writers Softball Game in East Hampton. It was originally published in the East Hampton Star and is published here with their permission.

Upstarts Versus Old-Timers

By Wilfrid Sheed

If you don't like what's happening to "the Hamptons" these days, then you probably don't care for the annual Artists & Writers Softball Game either, which by chance suffers from, or rejoices in, the exact same symptoms, to wit, celebrity-worship and the cult of fundraising.

"We used to have fun," snarls the old-timer. "Now they hold raffles instead."

To which the upstart — who is conveniently not just part of the problem but the whole darn thing — retorts, "Listen, Pops, you'll just have to take my word for this, but it's possible to have at least as much fun playing a game well as playing it badly, the way you guys used to. And, to prove it, I'll bet you that a hundred times more people come to see us this year, for two bucks or whatever, than ever came to watch you."

"Well," snarls the O.T., "at least we didn't need crowds to tell us we were having fun. And besides..." But upstarts don't get that way by letting other people talk.

"And who cares," he pipes on, "if a bunch of ancient artists and another bunch of senile writers and their seeing-eye dogs are having fun anyway?"

He dances out of reach of the O.T.'s cane, "and who cares if a few widows and orphans or mentally challenged deer (suddenly he's all heart, but 10 to 1 he can't remember the charity) get some new wheelchairs or corrective lenses out of it as well?" And so on.

Whichever side of the venerable argument you take, you've undoubtedly been taking it for a long time now and are not about to be budged. But for those in the wishy-washy center, herewith a couple of weasely considerations to keep you dithering for a while longer.

The "having fun" issue may actually be more of a stand-off than either side cares to admit. There are only two jokes indigenous to softball anyhow, and my old friend Warren Brandt made the first of them back during the Cro-Magnon Period, when he pitched a grapefruit instead of softball, and Chevy Chase made the second, in Post Modern times, by running the bases backward.

There are no other softball jokes, unless you count giving funny-looking signals, chattering like a magpie and falling down rounding third base, all of which are as likely to happen now as then, although perhaps they don't fall down with sheer fatigue as often as they used to.

What's most striking, in fact, is how much the ratio of clowns to introverts to bad losers and graceless winners remains the same over the years, as if The Game itself imposes these roles regardless of who's playing it and when. And something else that hasn't changed is one of the teams has always accused the other — quite correctly — of using ringers.

The only difference now concerns who is accusing whom of this scurvy practice. Once upon a time, The area was filled with genuine artist-artists who could actually afford to live out here while still young and the writers had to beat the bushes every year for anyone who could sign his own name, or was related by marriage to someone who could.

Now, of course, it's the artists who have to expand and "float" their self-definition to include the arts of the deal, of the possible, and of pretending you haven't played in the Red Sox farm system for the last five years. (Leif Hope casts a wide net.)

Never mind, says the upstart. Just be thankful that both sides still pay some lip service to the arts and haven't started reflecting the real changes in the neighborhood by calling their game "Agents v. Stockbrokers" or Lawyers v. Developers."

to these parts, for which the Hamptons has earned, for better or worse, the moniker "Hollywood East."

Spielberg came into the public eye for the third time when he hosted President Clinton and his wife Hillary for a long weekend in 1998. Secret servicemen were everywhere. And the Clintons used the Spielberg residence as a base for respite from the numerous fundraisers that were held at other locations in the community.

Since Spielberg's arrival here in 1983, his work in filmmaking has gotten better and better. If the movie Jaws is considered one of the most entertaining movies of all time, his movie Schindler's List is considered, even though not a popular hit of the magnitude of some of his other hits, one of the finest movies ever made. He directed The Color Purple, starring Whoopi Goldberg, and he produced the groundbreaking film Who Framed Roger Rabbit. He directed Jurassic Park and Saving Private Ryan. In the mid-1990s he teamed up with Jeffrey Katzenberg and David Geffen to found DreamWorks, a movie studio which has had great success, largely due to the genius of this man.

During the 1990s, Spielberg made two films with connections to the Hamptons. There was the authentic and true story about the slave ship Amistad, that had foundered off Montauk with several hundred slaves aboard who had successfully taken the ship over off Cuba. The historic events were made into a film called Amistad. Though the actual story — again — was set here on the East End, Spielberg filmed and directed most of it at Mystic, Connecticut, amidst the pre-revolutionary tall ships afloat in the outdoor museum.

But then Spielberg DID do some filmmaking in the Hamptons. The following year, 1998, location scouts for Spielberg's Deep Impact, a movie about a meteor that hits the Earth, found a location they liked on the beach in Amagansett. Auditions for extras were held at the Amagansett Firehouse, and the scene, which included two hundred extras, was shot. The scene, unfortunately, wound up on the cutting room floor, but another scene, with two of the stars from the film, did make it in. Robert Duvall and Tea Leoni, stood on the beach here watching the great tidal wave from the impact of the meteor roaring in to wash over them.

Last year, there were two milestones in Spielberg's life. One was going back to Long Beach State and, after taking some courses, finally earning a degree in filmmaking. As he went onstage to receive his diploma, the band struck up a rendition of the theme from Indiana Jones. He'd waited 35 years for that.

He was also awarded the title of the Knight of the Order of the British Empire last year. The award was presented to him by the Queen.

At the present time, Spielberg is directing Indiana Jones 4, which is scheduled to be released sometime next year. And he is also working on a film about King Arthur's Roundtable, which his researchers have discovered had no round table, no Sir Lancelot and no Sword Excaliber, but did have much else that nobody ever knew about.

Spielberg may or may not attend the Hamptons International Film Festival next week, but his presence looms over it. He is the measure of all who might try to follow in his footsteps. And at 57, his best work may still lie ahead. •

The Sheltered Islander By Sally Flynn

Observations of an Islander #271
Oktoberfest and other great ideas from Germany

A German bar is offering women who want to go shopping without their partners the chance to park them at what it bills as the country's first kindergarten for men. For $11.80US, the Nox Bar in downtown Hamburg is offering boys' games and home-improvement coaching as well as a meal and two beers for men left there for a Saturday afternoon, while women are free to shop in the city's swanky boutiques. So far, the "Maennergarten" has been a hit, with 20 men dumped there the first week, and 37 last Saturday. Bar manager Alexander Stein said, "Women have been delighted to be able to get rid of their men until 6 p.m., when many German stores close for the weekend. The bar plans new attractions, such as miniature car racing and cocktail courses."

What a brilliant idea! My favorite hangout this past summer was The Whale's Tale miniature golf course. I loved the totally upbeat Rock 'n' Roll theme of the place and the great music the owner played. Plus, he had iced cappuccinos and daily newspapers on hand. Forget about golf, I went to read the paper and have coffee, and maybe the occasional ice cream. The Whale's Tale on Shelter Island would be a brilliant place for a Mandergarten. I think the owner should consider taking his golf course in a whole new direction.

Men are so in the way when there is serious money to be spent for big ticket items like washing machines, dryers, dishwashers, TVs, cars, campers, or boats. They get too distracted by things like price, cost to have it delivered, cost of upkeep, warranties, licensing fees and all the other minor things around making a simple purchase. Not to mention that many men who are married have the erroneous belief that just because they married the woman, by some miracle of moral fortitude their opinion should now matter more than when they were just lowly boyfriends.

Greenport shops have "Husband Bench" benches up and down the street where the boutiques are....How great would it be for women who need to shop to ditch the old man at The Whale's Tale where he can read the morning news, have a cup of java, chat with other men, entertain himself playing golf in a contained and controlled setting where she can find him later, at the Mandergarten. It's much more controlled than Tom's Coffee Shop or the Shelter Island Pharmacy, which are both located on the main road and where men can meet other men and escape with them, not in a Fire Island sort of way, but in a Shelter Island sort of way where they go fishing when they should be mowing the lawn. The Whale's Tale is more out of the way and too far to walk to anywhere else. A woman could sign him into the Mandergarten and be reasonably sure that's where he'll be when she gets back on the Island. It is absolutely an idea whose time has come.

I ran this idea past my little brother, David. He thought it had potential, especially if they served beer and had a wide screen TV. Then I asked, "What would you think of a 'Gal'garten where men could ditch women while they went shopping?"

"Not necessary," he said, "it doesn't take men that long to shop for anything."

"So what do you do with your woman when you want to shop for something and you don't want her in the way?" I asked, anticipating an intelligent, articulate and possibly entertaining response.

"That's what trunks and duct tape are for," he said casually.

"I don't know, maybe it's me, but I'm thinkin' abduction and gagging a woman are not really conducive to intimacy," I responded.

"Men don't want intimacy, we just want sex. Intimacy is sex with too much talking afterwards when we are trying to get some sleep."

"Still not married, huh Dave?"

"Nope, wild horses couldn't drag me."

"Wild horses, huh?"

"Yup, so I'm training a team right now....," said the future resident of a Mandergarten.

Quite right. And also remember, if you're betting, the one great rule that links the past and present, namely that the team with the most ringers on it always wins.

It's a tradition, and you know how we feel about tradition around here.

So — just find a sucker, preferably an upstart, who doesn't know about this particular one, and take him for every penny he's worth. It'll make you feel much better about what's happening to the Hamptons and make him feel a little bit worse, and the rascals who invented The Game will look down on you — or up as the case may be — and smile.

You have understood the point of their little joke perfectly.

DAN'S DRACULA NIGHT

Photos and Text by Kimberly Goff

Sunday marked the final performance of the Spindletop production of Bram Stoker's Dracula at Guild Hall, produced and directed by Jonathan Peters. The show was great fun and well done. A prize was given by Dan's Papers for the best costume in the audience, and it was worn by Misao Grivas who came as a sexy pirate with fishnet stockings. Congratulations to the cast from Dan's Papers. You did a great job!

Bedell Cellars Barrel Tasting Sunday, October 26

Sample unreleased wines right from the barrel at Bedell Cellars today from 2:30 to 4 p.m. Bedell wine lovers, and there are many of them, will have a chance to sample the 2002 Bedell Cellars Merlot (winemaker Kip Bedell is known to many as Mr. Merlot for good reason!), 2002 Bedell Cellars Cabernet Sauvignon, Bedell Cellars 2001 Cupola and Corey Creek 2002 Cabernet Franc before they are even bottled and released. Admission is free, but attendees are encouraged to RSVP. There will also be an opportunity to purchase futures on all four wines, which ensures future allocation at a special pre-release price. For more information call Bedell Cellars at 734-7537.

Bedell Cellars and Corey Creek Vineyards also released three new wines on October 15: Bedell Cellars 1999 Cabernet Sauvignon, Corey Creek 2001 Reserve Chardonnay and Corey Creek 2000 Merlot.

The Bedell Cellars Cab exhibits notes of black currant and hints of blackberry, laced with deep coffee and cocoa tones. Firm tannins give this wine structure and indicate a long life. Buy now and cellar with confidence. At the winery: $25 a bottle.

The Corey Creek Reserve Chard ($18 per bottle) has concentrated fruit flavors and unmistakable North Fork "minerality." Not surprisingly, this elegant, well-balanced wine is often compared to the legendary wines of Meursault in Burgundy. This vineyard has made and continues to make some of my favorite Chards here on the North Fork.

The CC Merlot ($19) is full-bodied and vibrant, with distinctive flavors of black cherry and a long satisfying finish. Bedell Cellars is located on the Main Road in Cutchogue, Corey Creek Vineyards (765-4168) on the Main Road a little further east in Peconic.

Allegra Debuts At Castello di Borghese North Road, Cutchogue

Castello di Borghese Vineyard has just introduced a 2002 Late Harvest Riesling called Allegra, named after the daughter of vineyard owners Ann Marie and Marco Borghese. Produced in a very limited quantity (25 cases), the wine is priced at $34 a 375 ml bottle and is only available for sale at the vineyard's tasting room. Great as a dessert wine, Allegra is redolent of melon and tropical fruit flavors with peach and pear overtones.

Borghese has also introduced a 2002 Riesling. This exciting new wine has pear and peach flavors with crisp acidity. Stainless steel fermented for three weeks, the wine is well balanced wine with touches of mineral flavors. Priced at $13 a bottle at the tasting room, which is located on the North Road in Cutchogue (734-5111).

The Riesling has already won high praise from über chef Eberhard Müller (former head chef at Lutece, currently at Bayard's), who tasted the wine just prior to release and concluded: "I can't believe the concentration you got out of this fruit. The wine has nice balance with incredible acidity, very lush. It makes you salivate." And Müller, a native of Germany's Black Forrest region, knows a thing or two about Rieslings. Cheers.

Do You Know the Meaning of "Eleemosynary?"

North Fork Community Theatre Presents A Play on Words

By Jolie Trueman-Honey

I don't tend to like short stories. To me, they are the literary equivalent of wading when I would so much prefer to plunge into the murky depths of a novel. And I generally have the same prejudice against one act plays.

However, this past weekend, I was fortunate enough to catch the first production of the North Fork Community Theatre's season. Entitled A Play on Words: An Evening of One-act Plays, director Bob Kaplan has chosen three brief plays by David Ives for his first act, and a longer one by Lee Blessing for the second. While the thread that holds these two halves together is tenuous at best, each act contains strengths that make the production as a whole quite entertaining.

The first act is truly hilarious particularly if you enjoy theater of the absurd. In Sure Thing, the opening play, Betty (Danielle Turtainen) is sitting in a café absorbed in a book as Bill (Allan Stewart) approaches to ask if he can use the vacant chair opposite her. It is clear by his body language that he finds her attractive; so when she tells him that she is, in fact, waiting for someone else, discouraged, he turns away. And that's when reality ends and pure fantasy takes over.

How many times have you said to yourself, "Gee, why did I say that?" or "Why didn't I think of saying that?" or "Were there any words that I could have used to make her love me?" These are the ideas explored in this delightful and fast-paced morsel, for whenever a sentence is uttered that brings about the end of conversation between these two "star-crossed lovers", a bell rings, they take the dialogue back a few sentences, and they are allowed that precious verbal "do-over." For example, when Bill finally finds himself seated next to Betty, he asks her what she is reading. She responds, "The Sound and the Fury." As soon as he says, "Ah, Hemingway..." the bell rings and he gets to try again! Oh, if only...

The laughs come fast and furious as, in some parts, the bell rings after each word: "My college cum was a 2 (ring), 3 (ring), 4.0." I might consider a trip back just to get another listen!

The second of Ives' plays uses the same gimmick but in a very different setting. Entitled Variations on the Death of Trotsky, the play takes place on August 21, 1940, in a suburb of Mexico City. Leon Trotsky (Billy Paterson) is raving about communism and the oppression of the common people while his wife (Anne Westover) is reading an encyclopedia article about the life and death of her husband. When she realizes that, according to the article, this is the date that he is supposed to die, she glances toward him and sees what we, the audience, have seen all along: a pickaxe sticking out of her husband's head. And this is just the first variation!

The level of absurdity increases with each play, and by the time we reach The Philadelphia we are ready for virtually anything. Here, two friends meet in yet another café, but Mark is extremely disturbed about what a difficult day he's been having; his newsstand suddenly doesn't have the Daily News (he has to settle for Dan's Papers!), the guy in the deli looks at him as if he's crazy when he orders pastrami. Fortunately, his friend Al immediately recognizes the symptoms. Mark is clearly in "a Philadelphia," a sort of metaphysical black hole where, no matter what you want, you can't get it. But how does one emerge from this "Philadelphia" and land in the happy optimism of a "Los Angeles?" You'll have to see the play to find out.

When the lights came up at intermission, I was feeling delighted and ready for more laughs and certainly not prepared for the shift in tone that the second act created.

This lengthy one-acter, Eleemosynary, by Lee Blessing (nominated for a Pulitzer Prize for his 1987 play A Walk in the Woods), is a sad tale about three generations of women in a thoroughly dysfunctional family. Dorothea (Debbie Kruel-Flannery) is the matriarch, a brilliant individualist whose eccentricities become so extreme as to overpower those around her. Her damaged daughter (Jessica Roegler) flees shortly after giving birth to her own daughter, Echo (Melissa Mundy), now a lonely teenager whose love of words (she is continually studying for the National Spelling Bee – "eleemosynary" is one of her words) must substitute for the real communication she craves. The play is engaging and superbly acted.

While the significance of words and communication is certainly a common thread in all of these one act plays, because it is such a universal theme, the connection is too flimsy; the first and second acts seem to lack any bridge to foster our understanding, and the extreme shift in tone made for a very quiet audience after the final curtain.

However, I must congratulate director Bob Kaplan and producer Ed Weiss for taking the risk of bringing lesser-known but interesting and thought-provoking theater to this lively company. Despite its flaws, A Play on Words is worth seeing.

"A Play on Words" can be seen on Friday and Saturday evenings, October 24, 25, 31 and Nov. 1, at 8 p.m., and on Sunday Oct. 26 and Nov. 2 at 2:30. For further information and tickets, call: 631 298-NFCT.

Something Old, Something New: Orient Today And Yesterday

"Double Exposure: Orient Now and Then," an exhibition of landscape photographs by Stephen Longmire and William Steeple Davis, opened Saturday October 18 at the Floyd Memorial Library in Greenport. Davis (1884-1961) was Orient's artist-in-residence during his lifetime, leaving his secluded hamlet its own portrait, in photographs and paint. He also established the William Steeple Davis Trust in 1976, ensuring that the community would continue to have an artist in residence as well as a record of its changing face in images.

Stephen Longmire, a photographer and writer who has spent much of his life on the East End, was the Trust's artist-in-residence for 2001-2002. The time allowed him to begin a body of large format color photographs that reflect the area's changes, as well as its continuity with its agrarian and maritime past, in the face of today's resort economy. Although he works with photographic equipment not unlike Davis' own, Longmire's work is modern in its outlook, layering exposures, places and time frames to create composite images of this rapidly changing land and seascape. This exhibition pairs his contemporary images with Davis' own, made almost a century ago, allowing the two photographers jointly to "photograph" the passage of historical time.

Join Longmire this Saturday, October 25, for a gallery talk at the library at 3 p.m. Call 477-0660 for information.

KILL BILL

In this over-lubricated, greasy time when change slips and flips over as easily sleazy as an opportunistic politician's mind, it is good to have some things you can count on. In movies, you can find comfort in the idea that they will frequently come up with shocks to unsettle you and discomfort you. The shocks can come in big and small jolts. A really small one is l'il, honey bunny Meg Ryan's teensy-weensy body seen, uncovered, from her goldilocks down to her pink toes in, In The Cut. The biggest recent shocker and deepest cut of all is the bloody folding, spindling and mutilating done by Uma Thurman in Kill Bill, Vol. 1, Quentin Tarantino's pop-stylish, pastiche of spaghetti westerns, 70s junkplotation up-dated to Asian martial Art action and samurai swordsmanship. Ms. Thurman portrays The Bride, who is attacked on her wedding day by an Assassination Squad. She is left for dead. She has lost her unborn child. She vows revenge and writes a "to kill" list. High on the list is Bill, who was once her lover and possibly the baby's father. Bill hired the killers. This film and Vol.2, to be released in February, traces her exploits down the gory swath she slashes her way through to a grandly cinematic finale that is as lavish as MGM's 1951 American In Paris; the primary difference being gushers of blood in place of Paris fountains of eau de muguet. The brilliant red spray and splatter of Tarantino's showering display of choreographic violence is pumped up from his cluttered referential storage vats of barrels of cinema lore that, though heavily crude, soak you with a sincere love of the process of film making and, saturated, you are as satisfied as if cured in pure virgin, first – pressed, Grade A stuff.

Uma Thurman has always been up there, a cut above the others but, until you see her revenge-filled eyes, framed behind a Japanese steel sword that crosses precariously below her prominent nose – you haven't lived or died. She epitomizes one of Quent's intents in Kill Bill. He presents the somewhat threatening notion of the coming transfer of power from here in the West to the East and from men to women. He also continues to innovate the gangster genre with kid glee, shifting roles out from underneath the usual. He takes the thug and makes him a comic strip character and you know the blood letting is a cartoon. Unlike The Road to Perdition guys who took a comic book story and made it serious – ponderously, self consciously deep and ho-hum. With Quentin the fun is the thing, sensation, not a lot of sense or sensibility. For Quent's fans there's his excellent off-beat ear for music. In Kill Bill, he uses Zamfir, the raspy, pan flute soloist who floats in a tremendous amount of emotion. Who'da thunk? The overall score is by hip-hop artist RZA. It's as clever and as swift, kinetic and kicky as the choreography of martial arts maestro, Yuen Wo-Ping. Oddly, Kill Bill, is a quite classy movie. You'll note that it doesn't hit the low point of most rough and tumble films, the men aren't constantly being kicked in the groin. However, the men, catching the transfer of power from men to women may feel as if they'd been given a swift kick you know where. Slicing n' dicing is one thing!

ART COMMENTARY With Marion Wolberg Weiss

POSTER ART CELEBRATES CINEMA: BARBARA KRUGER AND RUTH NASCA

This year's poster for The Hamptons International Film Festival will prove confusing for many people. What does a hand on a light bulb have to do with cinema? If you're familiar with the creator, conceptual and poster artist Barbara Kruger, the answer is "everything."

Simply put, it often takes work to decipher conceptual art; making associations is the key. Understanding "codes" or vehicles for meaning is also a necessary step. Thus, the light bulb represents or "signifies" the essential ingredient for the projection of celluloid; light is obviously salient in photography as well, a device leading to the invention of the motion picture camera. It's interesting to note that the Lumiere Brothers were photographers who invented the first important film camera. Lumiere is, of course, French for "light."

Also working, perhaps, is the idea that the bulb is a primitive source of electric power. Is this Ms. Kruger's statement about how far film has deviated from its original intentions?

Moreover, the logo for the Hamptons Film Festival is composed of red strips; this critic can't help but recall Ms. Kruger's signature strips with written texts that accompany many of her works.

Ruth Nasca's show at the Merz Gallery in Sag Harbor presents a different view of poster art devoted to the cinema. In its way, it may be just as subversive as Ms. Kruger's piece. Ms. Nasca distorts commerical movie posters by painting over the star images, literally revealing other layers of meaning.

In the poster for Shadow Conspiracy, for example, the American flag is juxtaposed with two figures of a male and female. While the work is called "Peace," there's an ambiguity about the figures that may relate to the flag as well. There may also be an anti-war statement in "If," Ms. Nasca's version of the Air Force One poster.

Of course, Ms. Nasca is adept at creating stereotypes which have little to do with political statements. Consider "Skin" from the film Michael, featuring John Travolta and his glorious toothy smile, a real "hoot" if ever there was one.

Through her art, Ms. Nasca also pays homage, to the movie poster's role in popular culture. A case in point, Marilyn Monroe's legs revealed when she stands over a grate in Seven Year Itch.

Ms. Nasca's exhibit at the Merz Gallery will be on view until Nov 2.

Honoring the Artist: Margery Liz Gribin

Bridgehampton resident and artist Liz Gribin may not realize it, but she owes many important life experiences to fate. Consider, for example, that her father decided, while on a Swiss holiday, not to return home to London but to go directly to America.

Superficially, this doesn't sound like a crucial decision, but the year was 1939, and obviously Ms. Gribin and her family were spared the perils of World War II. It also meant that she was to grow up in New York, fated to take art lessons both at the Art Students League and on Saturdays at MOMA.

Not only was Ms. Gribin's early interest in art nurtured by where she lived, but the meeting of her future husband, Nat, was also a product of fate. According to Ms. Gribin, she was at Grossinger's in the Catskills with her father when the predestined moment appeared. "I spotted him first in the dining room," she says in a girlish tone.

Then that night at the nightclub, he asked me to dance. Of all the girls there, he spotted me. When I told him I was an art student, that was it. He was going to music and art school as well. To think, I might not have ever met him if we had stayed in London."

Ms. Gribin is just as upbeat when discussing her art, although she doesn't relate it to fate but to hard work. "One of my teachers, who influenced me greatly, said 'creating art doesn't get easier but harder,'" she explained. "And that's true. I want to create works that are different from each other. I also want to develop my technique and express a looser style."

Commenting more about her aesthetic objectives, Ms. Gribin describes this week's cover, "Twilight Time."

"My work has been called 'classical modernism,' she notes. "I'm really focused on color and composition. And I believe that drawing skills are important. The figures in my works are relaxed. I want people who see my art to feel relaxed as well."

Ms. Gribin has a point; there is a sense of serenity about the cover image. There's also a feeling that a story is taking place. Ms. Gribin notes, in this regard, that "If viewers see a story, it's very often their story, not mine."

If a plot doesn't influence Ms. Gribin, then what does? Her response comes quickly. "I will see a little something at The Metropolitan Museum that I can use in my compositions. If I have a problem working something out in a painting the solution will come at night when I'm in bed."

Whatever her influences, Ms. Gribin says she will "always be painting. Art was always waiting in the wings for me."

That's what we call fate. –Marion Wolberg Weiss

We've Got the Blues

Howlin' Wolf, Blind Lemon Jefferson, Charley Patton, Robert Johnson, Pops Staples, Bukka White, Leadbelly, Son House, and T-Bone Walker are just a few of the venerable blues masters; artists whose lyrics, strung of plain-sung words, convey a human plight so stirring that they are tempered only by the restless beat and singular bend of the note.

This is the sound of America, the roots of jazz, rock n' roll, R&B, hip-hop, and soul. So unique is the music to the U.S. that Congress officially proclaimed 2003 – Year of the Blues (YOTB). This is part of a major effort initiated by the filmmaker Martin Scorsese and the executive director of the Experience Music Project (EMP), Robert Santelli, to create wider recognition of the music. Their multi-media effort centers around a seven-part PBS project titled The Blues and includes a traveling educational show, books, CDs and DVDs and a website, along with a radio series, intended to honor the one hundredth anniversary of W.C. Handy's identification of the blues.

Handy, known as the "Father of the Blues," first thought it "the weirdest music I had ever heard." This year, B.B. King was awarded the coveted W.C. Handy Entertainer Award, The Blues Foundation's equivalent of the "Grammy," for the fifth consecutive year.

In commemoration of YOTB, there are many worthwhile events, some of which you can still catch. Currently, on WLIU Radio, Monday night is "Blues Night" and kicks off at 5:30 p.m. with "The WLIU Evening Report," featuring interviews with "blues historians and living legends" like Koko Taylor and Shemekia Copeland. From 7-8:00 p.m., there is the much acclaimed "The Blues: The Radio Series," an exploration of the evolution of the music.

Ben Manilla, who, with Santelli, is a producer of the Radio Series, notes, "The blues have gone on to influence every modern musical form. One of the misconceptions is that people think that because the roots are in Africa that this is an African music. It is not African, it is an American music that came about at the end of the slavery era when there was share-cropping and legal apartheid in the United States."

The blues were born out of "field holler that allowed workers to work in rhythm while communicating and expressing emotions that their keepers, bosses, or masters weren't paying much attention to." It was soon accompanied by instruments, such as guitar, piano and harmonica, and traveled north and then over to Europe. At first, the Europeans tried to correct the seminal sound achieved by "bending between two notes" but soon realized it was what "made the blues blue."

Blues player, Todd Wolfe

The "House of Blues Radio Hour," which Manilla has produced for 12 years with Dan Aykroyd, provided many "deep rich interviews with people who are no longer with us, such as Jimmy Rogers, part of the original Muddy Waters band, and Junior Wells, who was in the band later on, and then went on to great solo work and, of course, Brownie McGhee, who along with Sonny Terry, revolutionized the folk-blues movement and touched so many people around the world."

There are also new interviews with Aerosmith, B.B. King, Bonnie Raitt, Ruth Brown, and Dr. John, among others.

"'The Blues: The Radio Series' is a 13 hour, in-depth historical perspective," says Wally Smith, general manager of WLIU. "Hosted by Keb' Mo,' it airs for one hour every week and precedes our regular broadcast of 'Monday Night Blues With Greg Scott' which is on from 8-11:00 p.m."

Also, on October 31st at 8:00 p.m., there is the Blues Halloween Monster Mash at the Westhampton Beach Performing Arts Center (WHPAC) with a live Blues performance featuring three acts. The show opens with Lex Grey and the Urban Pioneers, with slide guitarist, Kerry Kearny, then showcases Todd Wolfe, followed by Frank Latorre and the King Bees, before wrapping up with a jam session.

Latorre is the inspiration behind the show, which is the last in a series planned to highlight the Year of the Blues at WHPAC. Latorre was turned on to the blues in 1971 with the sound of The Paul Butterfield Band. A personal high was achieved last Valentine's Day at the Arts Center when Martin Naftlin, an original member of that band, played with the King Bees.

But what has given Latorre the most gratification is the opportunity to bring blues musicians to a stage venue and "further advance the music here on Long Island." The program has been successful, and on two occasions was sold out with waiting lists of up 250.

When asked his definition of the blues, Latorre said "It is storytelling. It is about emotions but it is storytelling with a beat."

Tickets for the Blues Halloween Monster Mash are $35.00 and $40.00 and include an after party at The Atlantica Ballroom, where there will be music, dancing, and free hors d'oeuvres. Costumes are encouraged and door prizes are promised, including an autographed electric guitar.

theater review: second city

A touring branch of Chicago's famous comedy troupe, Second City, stopped off at Southampton College last Friday evening to give a performance for the Parrish Art Museum's Business Council members. Second City is very amusing, but the best topical skit of the evening belonged to Southampton's own Bob Florio, president of HamptonsonLine and Hamptons Telephone, when introducing the show.

As "King of Dunehampton," assisted by page Lisa Renaud, Florio stalked around his headquarters, "the palace of Rennert," brainstorming ideas for replenishing Dunehampton's bare treasury. His final answer? Build a casino!

Then Second City began their mix of set comedy skits, topical humor and improvisational comedy – all to background music from John Wagner. The first sketch was "Michael Flatley's Riverprance." The six-member troupe was suitably klutzy and their dancing was mercifully brief.

Another sketch involved audience input for a site (bowling alley), a profession (ballet dancers) and a relationship (brother and sister). The sextet broke up into three twosomes, wisely starting the improv with the ballet dancers. When another twosome would clap their hands, the dialogue stopped and the next twosome started their improv with the last line uttered by the previous twosome.

The challenge of improvisational comedy is the speed of inventing clever dialogue suitable to each audience – then knowing when to end the sketch. This Second City touring company of Jennifer Bills, Frank Caeti, Brendan Dowling, Ithamar Enriquez, Jenny Hagel and Rachael Mason is very accomplished at this. They improvise funny situations and come up with witty dialogue. (Second City started in Chicago more than 40 years ago and can boast of alums such as Mike Nichols, Elaine May, Gilda Radner and John Belushi.)

A few of this group's droll routines: a politically-incorrect student spelling bee, a PTA meeting turned into a rap competition, a home movie night with friends, the changes in American family life over several decades, and a rewrite of a scene from Tennessee Williams' The Glass Menagerie as done by playwright David Mamet in his Glengarry Glen Ross swearing mode.

In the topical humor category, there was one brief political winner: Older man interviewing a young woman: Do you do oral? (She nods yes.) Anal? (She nods yes.) Animal? (She grimaces "No.") Is this your first time interning on Capitol Hill? (She nods eagerly.)

The last section of the performance is improv with carefully channeled suggestions from the audience that fit into somewhat fixed routines. The cast enjoys this because they don't always know what their fellow members will do, and they often laugh just as much as the audience.

When You're Not At the Movies...

While most East Enders sigh loudly with relief at the end of summer traffic and show elation at the quietness of the restaurants and movie theaters, there is a secret love for the excitement that is the Hamptons. In October, with the arrival of the Hamptons International Film Festival, happy chaos abounds once again. It's a wonderful opportunity for the industry, and it's a great deal of fun for those of us who love watching movies. Of course, there is an even larger purpose to the festival: promoting films and filmmakers, especially young and promising artists, and helping this talent to find wider distribution for its work. To this end, there are a great variety of special events, panels and forums that explore different aspects of the complicated process of filmmaking.

Three time Academy Award nominee Joan Allen is this year's recipient of the Golden Starfish Award for Career Achievement. Unrivaled in peer respect and admired for her graceful and intelligent portrayals, Ms. Allen will assume the role of Mentor to this year's Rising Stars.

The Rising Stars Symposium, held at Guild Hall on Saturday, October 25th at 4:00 p.m., introduces five up and coming actors who have starring roles in feature or documentary films competing for the Golden Starfish Award. They share their experiences and discuss their craft with Ms. Allen.

New this year is the Travel and Leisure Magazine International Forum. The furnished tent, located at the Presbyterian Church in East Hampton, is intended as a gathering place for international filmmakers, companies and organizations to meet for refreshments, access the Internet and attend discussions and seminars.

On Friday, October 24th at 11:00 a.m., there is an informative discussion on International Film Partnership and Distribution; at 1:00 p.m. there will be an undoubtedly lively conversation about Television: the Other Distribution Option; at 3:00 p.m a Town Hall meeting on the changing role of the Film Critic; and at 5:00 p.m. the exciting Greenlighting Your Film; Understanding the Casting Process.

Finally, on Saturday at 1:00 p.m., a panel will explore Science and Hollywood; at 3:00 pm. the Town Hall meeting will cover New Media; at 4:00 p.m. the Short Circuit: The Student Short Film Genre will allow student filmmakers and mentors to discuss "finding your on style on the road to filmmaking," and at 5:00 p.m. the much anticipated Youth Media Panel will meet to end of the day.

With East Hampton UA Theater as the primary venue, you can expect Main Street to be the main street for crowds. Knowing this, the Festival planners chose East Hampton's Bookhampton as the site for a few fascinating conversations. On Friday at 10:00 a.m., they have Show, Don't Tell: Transforming Literature into Film, in which directors from this year's festival discuss recent transformations of books to the screen. On Saturday at 10:00 a.m., there is Screenwriting: Talent vs. Reality, sponsored by the Writer's Guild of America East. Here, accomplished screenwriters will explain what it takes to make it in their profession, and how to develop your talent as a screenwriter. On Sunday, at noon, meet Kathleen Turner at Making Films that Work for Women. She leads a roundtable discussion delving into the role that media plays in shaping women's definitions of themselves, and highlights the powerful importance of positive female images in film.

CLASSIC CARS WITH BOB GELBER

Awhile ago I wrote an article called "Slammed" about the fact that the current hot rod generation of car enthusiasts is similar to the hot rodders of the fifties. Only the cars are different.

Humans have always wanted to go faster; it's the nature of the beast. Riding a horse was faster than walking. The steamboat outran the sailboat. The steam locomotive was superseded by the diesel electric locomotive, now being challenged by the Mag-Lev bullet train. The jet plane is a slowpoke when compared to the space shuttle.

The same "need for speed" has paralleled the development of the automobile since Henry raced his Model "T". Over the last hundred years, automobiles have gotten faster, safer and more dependable. But aside from the obvious, like aesthetics and engineering, how much has really changed?

Originally, all cars were convertibles. Eventually, closed bodies were designed and built, but convertibles have always been considered the most sporty and adventuresome of car bodies. Today, Ford builds the new Thunderbird convertible to resemble a 1955 car.

Because of its omnipresence, we sometimes forget that the Mazda Miata, especially the 1990-1997 series one model, is a carbon copy of a 1962 English Lotus Elan. It is also the first retro car.

The new Volkswagen Beetle convertible is the newest member of the retro-convertible club, and next year the BMW Mini Cooper will have its top chopped off, simply for style and marketing purposes. The original Mini was never offered as a convertible by the BMC factory.

Chrysler PT Cruiser

The hyper-stylish cars today are all convertibles. However, many other retro-models are on the road, or soon will be. The most highly touted new model is the Ford GT. This high performance sports car is designed to be a Ferrari beater, just like the first Ford GT-40. It's a beautiful car, mainly because it looks identical to the original. The Ford GT-40 is one of the greatest race cars of all time; the retro model will make enthusiasts hearts flutter just like it did in 1964.

Chrysler has its handsome Crossfire, which looks like a show car sketch of every car collector's dream vehicle. It has details that represent many cars of the past, yet is a totally fresh design exercise mixing old and new.

Probably the most original old car shapes on the road are to be seen in the Audi TT series of sports cars. Whereas the American retro cars are born in the USA, these German Audi works of art look like they were created by designers who studied at the Bauhaus school of architecture. They spiritually and visually have the feeling of 1930 Auto Union racing cars. Picture a trio of black Audi coupes racing down a mist covered straight-away at the Nurburg Ring, running hard against another trio of silver retro Porsche Boxsters. Wow.

Let's not forget the Chrysler PT Cruiser, which like the Crossfire, is a combination of shapes from the past. Is it a '40s sedan delivery? From the rear, it looks like a hearse for midgets. From the front a

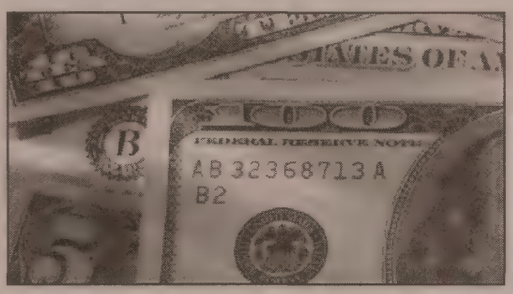
Money Psychology

Imagine that you are in a store about to buy a new pair of jeans. You are an avid shopper. You consider yourself to be someone who likes to buy nice things. You pick out the pair of jeans that you really like, bring it up to the counter and give it to the clerk. The clerk then breaks out that mysterious, beige, magic laser light thing and runs the red laser over the bar code that is sticking out from your jeans. The register reads $100.



You don't even flinch at this price. In fact, this is inexpensive for a pair of jeans. Generally, you buy jeans that are in the $120 range, maybe even the $175 range. You walk out of the store feeling like you got a great deal on these designer jeans.

You are in a restaurant. The waiter offers you some mineral water to drink. You accept it. He offers you an appetizer, you get it. He offers you an entrée, you get it. He offers you dessert, you get it. He offers you coffee, you get it. He offers you wine, you get it. He offers you dessert wine, you get it. Then you get the bill. For you and your company, the price comes to around $250. You feel good. This is money well spent.

The night is now coming down to an end. You are in the city for a night on the town, dinner was great, but now you are ready for bed. You hail a cab. Tell the cab driver to take you home which he does quickly. When you get out of the cab, the fare is a little more than you expected. You had predicted that this cab ride was going to cost $7 yet here is this cab driver telling you that it is $9. Can you believe this? This is an outrage. You then realize that the cab you took home was one of those minivan cabs and they charge a little extra because it is a minivan.

It makes sense to charge extra you think to yourself. That is, it WOULD make sense if you had tons of luggage to carry or were with a huge party of people. But charging extra for you? Now? This does not make sense. You start to argue, the cabby gets out of his driver seat. You get out of the passenger seat. You are mad, you won't pay. He is mad that you won't pay. He shoves you.

Can you believe this guy? First he tries to rip you off, now he is shoving you. You shove him back. You shove him back hard, really hard. He shoves you back. People in the street start to watch you. This fight is over $2. No, it's not. This fight is about the principal. The cabby grabs your shirt, ripping it. He kicks your new jeans, leaving mud all over them. You are furious.

People have now formed a crowd. You are two people starting to fight, of course this is going to draw a crowd. He puts you in a headlock. You bite his arm. This is getting out of hand. You start to think back to your self-defense classes, and realize that those classes were a complete waste of money. Suddenly a cop pulls up, turns on his lights. Two quick "woop woop" noises pierce your ears. The cabby lets you go, smiles, and gets in the cab. You stand up, sweating, scared as hell, thankful you are still alive. The cabby drives off. The cop steps out of the car. You start to explain your side of the story.

I think the way people think about money in this country is really weird. I guess everyone is different. But people are willing to pay a lot of money for things that they could buy for a lot less. Jeans should not be $200 but we still buy them. Water in a restaurant should not be $11, it should be free. Now they make you feel like an idiot, if you just want the tap water.

This whole concept of money is a tough thing to deal with, especially when you in are college and you don't have money to burn. I feel like people expect you to have money to burn on nothing these days.

All of my friends are always saying, "When I get rich, I'm going to (fill in the blank)." We should be saying, "In my life, I want to (fill in the blank)."

'37 Ford. Whatever it is, it works, and Chrysler has sold a million of 'em. I give Chrysler credit for introducing this most interesting design exercise and selling it for a bargain price.

Next year Chevy is coming out with a pickup truck that is a modern version of its 1951 half ton pickup. A few years ago, one member of my modest fleet was a '51 Chevy pickup and I loved its style. Even though the new Chevy retro truck will be pricey at $40,000, Chevy will do well with them. Great looks, so representative of trucks of that era.

We still like familiar shapes that evoke the past, thus the influx of all these retro car designs. We want speed, but with the modest speed limits on our roads, I sometimes wonder how practical it is to have a 400 horsepower engine under the hood. The best comment I can make here is that you can't get a ticket for acceleration. Let's face it, G-forces feel good.

The word is out. To be au courant, one has to drive a new car that looks like an old car. It should be fast and probably a convertible. Quite possibly, soon a new retro pickup truck might dazzle your senses. To really simplify things though, why not just buy a fast collector car? I've been doing that for years. To quote the wisdom of Yogi Berra, "It's deja vu all over again".

Fiesta Latino

October is glorious on the East End. If you are from Latin America and now call the Hamptons your home, October is particulary special. It is Hispanic Heritage Month, and this year, the local celebration promises to be bigger and better than before. Organized by SoLA, a nonprofit dedicated to serving the needs of the expanding Latin American immigrant population, the 10th Annual Hispanic Festival takes place on October 26th, from noon to 8 p.m., at Southampton High.

Two years ago, the Festival outgrew its former space, and last year, over 600 people from all segments of the community joined the fun, enjoying music, dance and food. The cultures of more than 17 Latin American countries are represented with a special emphasis on Colombia, Ecuador, Mexico, Costa Rica, Dominican Republic, Guatemala and El Salvador.

Highlights include hand-made items and jewelry from Colombia that will be for sale. The food is always a popular part of the festival. The tasty, authentically-prepared selections feature: posole from Mexico; empanadas and tamales from Mexico, Colombia, and Ecuador; specialty meats from Colombia such as chorizos, lechona and morsilla,; tostones from Puerto Rico; tostados con platanos from Guatemala; pollo asado, Costa Rican-style; ensalate verde from Costa Rica and arroz con leche from Colombia.

Of course, no Latin celebration would be complete without music and dance, and two great groups, Teatro Hispano and Duo Sentimental, will perform. The event will be carried live over a bilingual radio broadcast on WLNG 92.1 FM from Sag Harbor, and SoLA hopes to inspire a weekly local Spanish language radio program.

Established as a showcase for the richness and diversity found in Latin America, , the Hispanic Festival serves another important purpose – as a forum for interaction. While emphasizing the importance of respecting one's heritage, SoLA also underscores the critical value of meeting one's "neighbors," and with its programs, promotes a dialogue for cultural exchange. Ultimately, the organization hopes that building such relationships through this interaction and educational outreach will lead to an understanding that allows for smoother communication and acceptance.

Show your support this Sunday, and invite your friends to the festival that promises to be as much fun as it is delicious. –Robin F. Smith

Silvia Lehrer's Cooking Column

Our local apples may have got off to a late start this season because of a cool, rainy spring and early summer, yet the harvest is alive and well. Judging by the cars lining up to buy the medley of home-grown apples, fresh pressed cider, and apple cider doughnuts at the Milk Pail, the apple orchard in Water Mill, the fall apple harvest is in full gear.

Several varieties available at this time are the sweet-tart Jonagold, semi-tart Empire and Cortland, the tart Mutsu, and the sweet Fuji. The choice is yours for eating out of hand or for cooking and baking. According to Jen Halsey there is a tendency for customers to buy sweet apples for cooking and baking so that less sugar is necessary. However it is important to note that drier apples, such as Jonagold and Empire, hold their shape better in baking. These varieties are also excellent for eating.

I recently prepared a simple apple compote topped with breadcrumbs sautéed in olive oil and served it with a raspberry sauce made from raspberry jam. While the inspiration came from a dated Spanish cookbook on olive oil, Spanish chefs in Spain are currently making headlines with their cutting edge cooking. The recipe is contrasted to a crisp. Instead of a rich butter crumb, coarse breadcrumbs mingle with the tender and slightly tart apples and crunch with each bite. And it couldn't be easier to prepare.

I looked, too, to a treasure of a baking book by Elizabeth Alston called Best Baking, a Harper Perennial, 2000 soft cover book. Gretchen's Cranberry-apple cake is from a restaurateur friend of Ms. Alston's from Seattle. I found it appealing and timely and have reprinted it here for your apple baking pleasure.

APPLE DELIGHT WITH RASPBERRY JAM SAUCE

This unusual recipe with Spanish origins features a crisp topping of sautéed breadcrumbs. Assemble this do-ahead dish 5 or 10 minutes before serving.
Serves 4-6

1/4 cup dark raisins
2 tablespoons dry Spanish sherry
2 1/2 pounds apples, Jonagold, Empire or Golden Delicious
1 cup water
1/2 cup sugar
1-inch wide slice lemon peel
1 cup day-old coarse bread crumbs
1/4 cup extra-virgin olive oil

For the sauce
1 cup raspberry jam
2 tablespoons water
1 teaspoon lemon juice

1.Soak the raisins in sherry for about 30 minutes. Meanwhile peel and core the apples and cut into 1/2-inch wedges.

2.Put the water in a 3 to 3 1/2 quart saucepan large enough to hold the apples. Add sugar and stir to dissolve over medium heat. Put in the lemon peel and apples and bring to the edge of a boil. Adjust heat to a simmer and cook covered for 10-12 minutes until tender but still hold their shape. Add the raisins and carefully stir to mix. Can be prepared several hours ahead.

3.Warm the olive oil in a small skillet and put in the breadcrumbs. Saute about 3-4 minutes until golden. Drain on paper towels and set aside.

4. Heat the jam with the water and lemon juice, stirring with a wooden spoon for 3-4 minutes until softened. Spoon into a small serving bowl.

5. To serve sprinkle some of the breadcrumbs on the bottom of a serving plate, mound the apples on top and spoon over remaining crumbs. Serve at room temperature with the sauce.

GRETCHEN'S CRANBERRY-APPLE CAKE

Author Elizabeth Alston calls the cake a "good keeper" and also quite low in fat. Makes 12- 16 portions.

2 cups all-purpose flour
1 teaspoon baking soda
1 teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon ground nutmeg
1 teaspoon ground cinnamon
2 medium-size Granny Smith apples
1 3/4 cups packed dark brown sugar
1/2 cup vegetable oil
2 large eggs
1 teaspoon vanilla extract
2 cups fresh or frozen cranberries
1 cup pecans or walnuts, chopped coarse

Heat oven to 350 degrees. Grease a 10- or 12-cup Bundt pan or 10 x 4-inch Tube pan.

1.Place the flour, baking soda, salt, nutmeg, and cinnamon into a bowl. Stir to mix well.

2.Quarter and core the apples (no need to peel). Cut into 1/4-inch chunks (you will need about 2 cups).

3.Put the brown sugar, oil, eggs and vanilla into a large bowl and beat smooth with a wire whisk. Using a wooden spoon, stir in the flour mixture. Stir in the cranberries, apples and nuts. The batter will be stiff.

4. Spread the batter in the prepared pan and bake until a wooden pick inserted in the center of the cake comes out clean, about 1 hour and 5 to 15 minutes. Place the pan on a wire rack to cool for 30 minutes. Loosen the edges of the cake and invert on the rack. Let cool completely. It is good fresh; or wrap airtight and store overnight at room temperature before serving or freezing.

Dining In The Hamptons

The Maidstone Arms

207 Main Street
East Hampton
631-324-5006

Housed in one of the most beautiful buildings in East Hampton, looking over the picturesque pond to the old church and churchyard, there is little doubt that The Maidstone Arms is truly a Long Island institution. But being an institution can create all kinds of dilemmas, as institutions can be perceived as being stuffy and elitist. Owners Coke Ann and Jarvis Wilcox have been trying to dispel this image as Diane McIngvale, the Inn Keeper (or General Manager), explained as we sat in the warm and relaxing lounge before we went in to the restaurant. Her goal is to make the restaurant a place for all ages and for a variety of dining options. Apart from the main dining room, they have opened the Boat Bar & Bistro for informal, varied meals. Here you can choose from a wide selection of dishes or enjoy the three course Prix Fixe, which can also be served in the main room.

Philippe Sauriat, the very charming and totally professional Restaurant Manager, explained how the emphasis today throughout The Maidstone Arms is on helpful and friendly service. During our visit, everything we saw indicated that they have been very successful in achieving their objective.

Paul Del Favero, the Executive Chef, brought his considerable international reputation to the restaurant last year and the menu now totally reflects his philosophy of making use of the freshest and highest quality products and producing dishes which are not over elaborate in style.

We chose to start with seared day-boat scallops served with butternut squash risotto and sage butter and a jumbo lump crabmeat and pear tomato salad served with an avocado lime puree. Now, the use of superlatives in writing should be strictly controlled and that applies doubly to reviews. Despite this, we both agreed that the scallops were excellent and that together with the butternut squash risotto the result was a wonderful blending of taste, visual appeal and texture that merits reporting that, without any doubt this was the best scallop dish we have ever been privileged to enjoy. Having said this, the crabmeat salad with its citric accompaniment and great presentation was another dish we thoroughly enjoyed. With these we drank Philippe's recommendation of a wonderfully aromatic Sauvignon Blanc Pouilly Fume and an Italian Vermentino, chosen from the excellent list of wines served by the glass. Incidentally The Maidstone Arms deserves credit, not simply because it has a great wine list which regularly wins the Wine Spectator Award of Excellence but also because it is priced for all tastes and pockets with good wines available from the low $20's upwards to the dizzy heights of a Romanee-Conti listed at $2355.

Paul offers a relatively short but well-chosen list of entrées including local codfish, lobster, rack of lamb and duck. We chose the wild king salmon served with lentils and braised endive and sherry vinegar, which merged the delicate but full favor of a superb piece of salmon with the carefully chosen accompaniments to produce a simple but very satisfying dish. A glass of a pinot noir from Robert Sinskey's Californian vineyards showed yet again that some red wines go very well with some fish dishes. Our other entrée was the Niman Ranch rib eye steak, which came served on a delectable Stilton and potato gratin. An additional treat was the roasted marrow bone, something too rarely seen today. Here again, sorry but superlatives have to be used. This was a piece of steak to rave about. Perfectly cooked to order and with an aroma and texture that is so rarely found even in so called high-class steak houses in Manhattan. We shared this, as we always do and both again agreed – the best steak ever. Philippe recommended a glass of La Cominda Riserva, a Chianti Classico and his choice, once again, received our total approval.

Molly Harding, the Pastry Chef at the Maidstone Arms, is well renowned for her delicious desserts and we pondered over the choice between a Tahitian vanilla crème brulee that we had enjoyed on a previous visit or the maple pecan bread pudding served with blackberry compote and crème fraiche or a mini apple tart tatin, but eventually chose to share the pumpkin walnut layer cake with ginger cream cheese icing and buttermilk ice cream. This was delectable, not oversweet but with a perfect blend of tastes that brought a wonderful meal to an end.

Appetizers range from $7 to $14; Main courses from $24 to $34; Desserts $8.50. The Prix Fixe will be $29 after November 1st. In the Boat Bar & Bistro main courses are from $10 to $18.

The Maidstone Arms will always be a landmark and hopefully will never lose its special atmosphere. Today it is in no way stuffy or elitist but rather, what the owners and the management team set out to create. A place where you can decide on the spur of the moment to have a casual meal or a place where you can celebrate that special occasion. Whichever you choose, the food is great and you should enjoy the experience. –Roy Bradbrook.

With or Without Butter

If you're ready to trade in your plasma TV and surround sound for the next level in media luxury, follow closely. New innovations in technology are making media rooms easier to envision and install.

In the past, in-home theaters were popular among the rich and famous. The cost of such a high-tech system could break the bank. But today, innovative equipment makes it a bit more affordable for the rest of us.

I began researching this article with a visit to Crescendo Designs in Southampton. Their showroom displays a generous mix of state-of-the-art equipment and high-end systems. My focus, however, was on the design of their model media room. As I entered the room, I immediately gained a better understanding of the standard layout that is required when selecting an appropriate space in your home. The speakers were set up with two in the back, two in the front and one central. Chris Brody, Design Engineer and Steve Tulkop, Project Supervisor directed me to their in-store display room. I sat on the comfy leather couch and with the touch of a button, Chris transformed the space into a movie theater. A Stuart wide-projection screen dropped down from the ceiling while the lights dimmed and projector and audio kicked in. The picture quality was sharp and the color was brilliant and synched perfectly with the audio sound that pulsed through my body. I became one with the film.

The cost for this set-up is approximately $35,000 and includes: a built-in, drop-down ceiling remote control Stuart projection screen - $3,500, Seleco SIM2 HT300 PLUS projector - $14,000, DV227A-DVD Player - $2,999, and surround speaker units - $2,700, as well as an Arcam processor and amplifier system that runs approximately $10,000, plus a few extras such as the Pronto remote control mentioned above - $1,000. Installation is not included and can take a few days to complete. Crescendo Designs will work around your budget, and some rooms can actually be designed for under $10,000. Call 631-283-2133 for more information.

If you would like to create an in-home media room on your own, there are many options to consider before starting. The dimensions of your potential media room will play a key role in planning this project. Sound and light can easily create interference with the optimum theater experience.

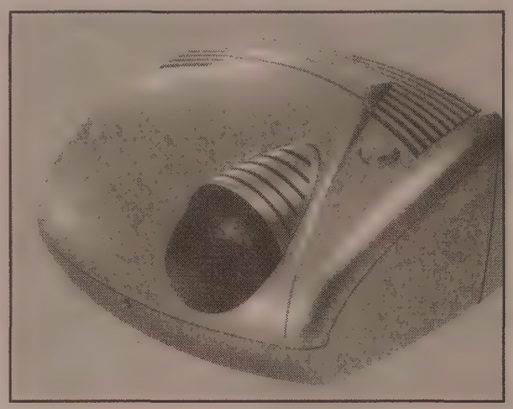
Windows can be a problem, but with new technology, electronic blackened shades can be used. There is a great website, www.cinemasource.com, that actually has an optimum room dimension calculator to help you maximize the space.

Once your room is planned, you can focus on the equipment. The range of quality and brands is large, but we can narrow it down a bit. When it comes to sound systems and DVD players, Bose and Bang & Olufsen are two accessible and affordable manufacturers.

Bose is an American company with a reputation for superb quality in surround sound systems. Starting with a top-of-the-line complete audio system, it offers the Lifestyle 50 priced at $3,500. This premier component includes a DVD with CD based system with a radio remote feature that can operate up to 65 feet away. Log onto www.bose.com for more information on prices, equipment and store locations.



Bang and Olufsen, a premium and high-tech company from Denmark offers an array of sound systems, speakers and extras that will round out your home theater. For more information on Bang and Olufsen, you can call 847-590-4900 or log onto www.bang-olufsen.com.

Now that the technical side of your media room is ironed out, you can proceed with the next step. The aesthetics of your room is essential and will add to the feel and authenticity of the entire experience. Acoustic Innovations (800-983-6233) is cutting edge company that will help finish off the ensemble. They will assist with the planning, design and decor. In our neck of the woods, At Home in Sag Harbor offers reclining leather two-seaters with cup holders for $4,460. This plush recliner will compliment your room with a stylish flare. If you sit in these lush recliners, I promise you will not want to get up. Call In Home at 631-725-7900.

Whether you start with $3,000 or several hundred thousand dollars, creating a home theater is a fun project that will entertain and impress your family and friends for years to come. If you lead a busy life and don't get out much, this may provide an escape without ever leaving your home.

Sit back and enjoy the show! –Kelly Marcioch

HOMEGROWN BY BRIAN HALWEIL

Slow Down and Eat

In "Union Sundown," a little-known track on his 1983 album "Infidels," Bob Dylan croons, "They used to grow food in Kansas/Now they want to grow it on the moon and eat it raw/I can imagine a time/When your home garden will be against the law."

We're not quite there yet, but old Bob knew which way the wind was blowing. Just last year, the Feds tried to outlaw raw-milk cheese in the United States. They said the move would help protect public health, although there is no evidence that raw-milk cheeses are dangerous. Investigations later revealed that the Feds were largely responding to requests from Big Cheese (a.k.a., Kraft) to staunch the rapidly growing American interest in artisanal cheeses which was beginning to squeeze the Velveeta market.

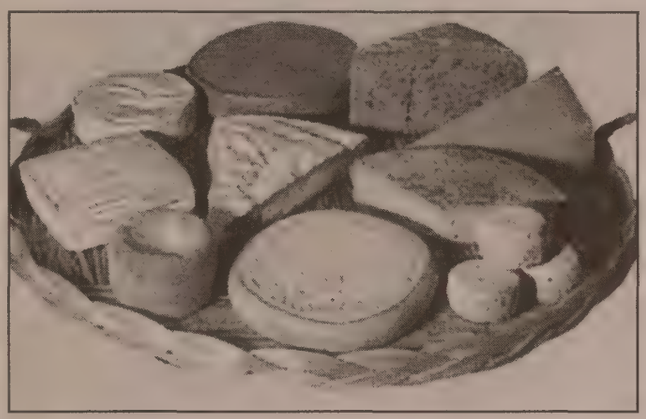
The law would have banned Parmigiano-Reggiano, Swiss Emmental, Swiss Gruyere, Swiss Appenzell, Vigneron, Comte, some Vermont Cheddars, English Farmhouse Cheddars, Spanish Idiazabal and Manchego, among other raw-milk cheeses whose intense flavor depends on the microbes in cow's milk which are killed during pasteurization.

Luckily, the attempt failed. A "Cheese of Choice" coalition composed of chefs, farmers, and foodies rallied like minutemen and threatened to sue in the name of flavor. A key member of the coalition was Slow Food USA, the American arm of an international movement that sprouted in Italy in the 1980s and has grown to include 75,000 members in 80 nations. There are 10,000 members in America alone. Not bad for a group with a snail as its mascot.

Now you have a chance to be part of this wave. The American Hotel in Sag Harbor will host the inaugural meeting of Slow Food East End with a dinner on November 2.

Carlo Petrini, founder and president of Slow Food, recently said that the movement works to defend "the right to taste." He started Slow Food in 1986 as a response to the global march of fast food and the lifestyle it encourages — McDonald's opened it's first shop in Rome that same year.

Today, Slow Food members preserve regional cuisines, revive heirloom food varieties, and celebrate the pleasures of leisurely, hand-crafted meals shared with friends and family. The movement has built a metaphorical Ark of Taste for crops and cooking techniques in danger of going extinct; the American Ark contains Heritage Turkeys, Iroquois White Corn, Hand Harvested Great Lakes Wild Rice, and New Mexican Native Chile. The New York City chapter of Slow Food has hosted events revolving around traditional cocktails, unusual cured meats and barbecue preparations, handcrafted wine and beer, organic produce from the Hudson Valley, and microroasted coffees. In Europe, towns whose design, festivals, and shop owners champion the slow lifestyle have won a designation as "Slow Cities." (Could Sag Harbor be the first Slow City in the New World?)



The movement spreads when a few interested eaters decide to form a local chapter or "convivium," the Latin word for banquet. The convivium is supposed to educate its members in matters of taste and create moments of, you guessed it, conviviality.

Ted Conklin, one of the founding members of the East End convivium and owner of the American Hotel, seems uniquely prepared for this challenge. He has farmed in upstate New York and on Long Island's North Fork, becoming one of the first people in this area to grow food explicitly for a restaurant. As owner of the American Hotel, Conklin has assembled a dizzying wine cache, with a special eye towards those Long Island vineyards that he thinks have the potential to produce some of the world's finest wines. (Wine Spectator has named the Hotel's selection "One of the Greatest Wine Lists in the World" for each of the past twenty years.) For the first meeting at the Hotel, Conklin hopes to create a mini-Union Square market, a "grazing market," where attendees can mingle with farmers and sample Long Island lettuce, honey, apples, and other comestibles. Remember, the emphasis is on the ingredients and how they got to the table.

Tom Morgan, who heads up marketing at Lenz Winery in Peconic and is another founding member, thought about Slow Food recently as he was picking Porcini mushrooms around his house and pulling bluefish out of the sea. A consummate gastronome who does a lot of "slow cooking and slow eating," Morgan said that the only way to keep farming viable in the area is to build a craving for local cuisine.

"I was attracted by the sustainability aspect, the inclusiveness, the cultural diversity, and all through food," said Kate Plumb with EECO farm in East Hampton, who is another founding member of Slow Food East End. "The movement is really the embodiment of Think globally, Act locally."

There is no doubt that the East End is poised to emerge as a culinary mecca, with its impeccable produce, maturing wineries, abundant seafood, and general interest in taste. But getting locals serious about food might require a movement. Not a dreary movement about sacrifice or guilt or marching in the driving rain, but one about pleasure and gastronomic highs. About enjoying good drink and food with friends. Where do I sign up?

The inaugural meeting of Slow Food East End will be held at the American Hotel at 5:30 p.m. on Sunday, November 2. The cost of the reception and limited-choice dinner is $30 plus tax and service. Call 725-3535 for reservations.

Pins and Needles

Fashionistas are smitten with mittens and those extra long chunky scarves in marvelous yarns. These bulky, chenille, eyelash and lumpy scarves are more feature than accessory. They are wrapped, slung over the hips and head and displayed on just about every body part, with or without coats and sweaters. And who's knitting them? Celebrities, socialites, trendsetters are going to special engagements or meeting up with like-minded crafters to "knit and dish" while turning out the next terrifically textured item.

Patterns are traded and needles are shared over gossip. Colors, textures, knits and purls grow into ideas. The "twenty and thirty- somethings" are rediscovering what the hippies knew, the satisfaction of designing and creating a garment.

We hippies learned from our moms. When my mother arrived in Great Neck from Denmark she brought a legacy born of comfort and function. The Scandinavian sweaters, mittens and hats she knitted were sought after by family members, friends and townspeople and kept Mama's hands busy clicking the needles as we watched in fascination the strands of yarn become intricate motifs through thousands of hand locked stitches.

Later she guided me in the craft, knit one, purl one, until I could produce a relatively even swatch, and ultimately count pattern stitches to make two reindeer facing off across a red woolen field. Then in high school my friends and I made enormous sweaters with thick yarns and large needles to go over our short skirts, not unlike Britney Spears' Sloppy Joe outfit. Fuzzy mohair pullovers kept us cozy at the bus stop, giggling about the Beatles.

My children had monogrammed, knitted scarves for the winter months to match their snowsuits, fashioned on the fly between cooking and writing term papers for that bachelor's degree. Then when my aunt passed away we found the large afghan that was kept in her living room to keep off the winter chill. Of all the gifts I knitted, she always liked that afghan best.

The world needs a cozy afghan right now. People are meeting in cafes and pubs in cities all over to share patterns and life, in what would be called a fad if knitting hadn't been around forever. The Booze & Yarn Knitting Club meets "in bars in lower Manhattan one night a week to drink, knit and hang out." After a few cocktails people tend to spin a few yarns.

A number of new books reflect the renewed interest. Everyone, from Daryl Hannah and Portia de Rossi to Rosie Perez and Courtney Thorne Smith, is knitting chunky scarves crafted between takes. Celebrity Scarves, introduced by Abra Edleman and Isaac Mizrahi, showcases the stars and their scarves along with high fashion pattern instructions.

For another fun read, Rita at Downtown Yarns in Manhattan recommends Stitch n Bitch by Debbie Stoller, just released by Workman Publishing. The author founded an ad hoc circle of aficionados with that appellation whose humor will keep you in stitches.

Rita compares the warmth and traditionalism of the Whitney's Amish quilting display last year to the current cultural comfort found in knitting. Living in a society that tears time apart and terrorizes us with headlines, it is essential to slow down and find a moment to share.

If you are interested in learning how to knit, Sabine and Rosemary at Knitlove teach in their shop, the Ross School and Amagansett Applied Arts School. Grandmothers, new mothers and young girls are fascinated with the textures, hues and designs that go in to the work. Men are also there knitting blankets, sweaters and scarves. Yarn is put aside by Knitlove and donated by residents as closets are cleaned, to be given to a local church to make garments for a charitable bazaar.

For those who enjoy the peaceful process of creating knitted garments, www.woolworks.org/ charity.html lists charities everywhere that need them.

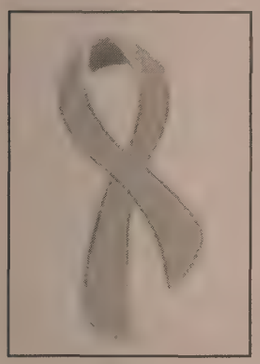
Breast Cancer Awareness

Thousands of organizations nationwide devote their time, money and energy to a great humanitarian cause – cancer awareness. And since October is Breast Cancer Awareness month, these nonprofits have been hard at work, and that includes a number of them right in the neighborhoods of the East End.

The South Fork Breast Health Coalition, the East End Area Office for The American Cancer Society, has been based in Southampton since 1994 and works closely with the Southampton Breast Center. Their mission is a combined effort to educate women about breast cancer awareness, along with helping to alleviate some of the pressures associated with chemotherapy or radiation treatments that female cancer patients encounter.

For Breast Cancer Awareness Month, the Coalition has had their noses to the grindstone with their regular programs and special events, including the 5K Walk/Run that took place on Shelter Island on October 19th. A large number of both North and South Fork residents made their way to support the cause that day, but if you weren't able to attend, there is another upcoming fundraiser planned for Halloween at the Publick House in Southampton. It will be a night of fun for all and the $10 entry fee will go to help The South Fork Breast Coalition. For more information on the event, you can call (631) 283-2800.



The "Look Better Feel Better" Program sponsored by the Southampton Hospital and the American Cancer Society also took place at the hospital on October 14th. In this program, women undergoing treatments got to meet with a trained cosmetologist for a three hour makeover to help soothe the soul. This is one of their year-round programs, so if you interested in upcoming sessions, you can register by calling (631)726-8482.

The American Cancer Society also had their 10th Annual 5K Walk at Jones Beach that took place on October 19th. Although it was a little further from home, many East Enders, including Westhampton high school students, took the ride up island to show their support. The ACS also fundraises locally through "The Discovery Shop" in Southampton with the proceeds from the thrift store going towards cancer awareness. And for the entire months of October, Macy's will be selling a bear for the organization. The little bear comes with information on breast care and six dollars for every ten dollar bear will be donated.

And if you think that's all that's been going on, think again. An amazing young woman from East Hampton, Monica Russo, decided to devote herself to the breast cancer cause when her mother recently came out of remission. She is a recent graduate of the Fashion Institute of Technology and a recipient of a thousand dollar award from Kate Spade for her exceptional creativity and achievement in handbag design. Monica wanted to put her creative juices to work with The South Fork Breast Health Coalition, so she designed a line of handbags featuring the breast cancer ribbon in honor of her mom. They are being sold in Shoe-In, Palm Produce and Stef's Stuff in East Hampton for the month of October and will

Get A Leg Up On Beauty

Now there's a distinct chill in the air, you may think that it's time to cover up your legs and, dare I say it, even let those sneaky little "stubbly" hairs grow a tad longer than you normally would, (admit it, we've all been there), but here's the news. Think again. Why worry about the state of your legs this winter? Because this year is the revival of the mini skirt! Yes, it's back with a vengeance. So sharpen up those razor blades and heat up that wax, ready for the hottest look in fashion. But before you groan at the notion of showing off your usual winter white, lackluster, hairy set of gams, don't. Here's a leg up on how to get ready to accommodate even the micro miniest of skirts.

First things first. Exercise. I spoke to Equinox fitness' trainer, Kacy Duke, who told me the three most essential ways to shape up your legs ready for any mini.

"To begin, head for the hills," she says. Plenty of walking, or running. This shouldn't be too hard to accomplish in our beautiful Hamptons landscape and Kacy even suggests a power walk in the sand to really give yourself and your legs a cardio detox and sculpt. Then, once you've finished stomping down the beach, she recommends plenty of squats and lunges to help define ham-strings, quads and glutes, (legs and bottoms to us layman). Do three sets of 12 reps, three times a week and you're well on your way to raising those hemlines.

But once your legs are sculpted to perfection, then what? Well, no self respecting mini skirt wearer would step foot without exfoliating, hydrating and working on any cellulite. Even if you plan to wear tights or hose, says Margaret Banks from Sephora. "Unconditioned legs still show under tights," she remarks, as she points out some of their most popular selling leg treatment products.

Why not try Bliss Lab products made especially for the legs? You could start with their High Thighs Seaweed Task Mask, at $45, to help fight cellulite and lumpy legs. Rub this product in three times a week. Along with this, try their Serious Seaweed Cellulite Soap, not to be confused with the seaweed you'll find at the beach when you're power walking. Rather, this seaweed soap, combined with almond oil, is actually molded so that it has massage nodules that help to knead away cellulite.

Then for serious leg smoothing action, exfoliate with their Super Slough Scrub, $28, containing jojoba scrub beads in a gel that hyper-hydrates and gets rid of dead cells to reveal radiant skin beneath. Last but not least moisturize, moisturize, moisturize. Where would we be without showing off smooth silky hydrated legs? Most body moisturizers will do. Though you can turn to Bliss' Lemon and Sage Soapy Sap, $28, for that, as well.

Now you have perfect legs for a mini, but the suntan you had a month ago is fading fast. Well, there are two ways to go. First you can fake it. Get rid of winter white legs with Bathina Body So Fine, by Benefit, $26. This product leaves a shimmering hint of color for perfectly groomed legs. Or Nars body glow, $55 for a sun kissed glow. What most are doing this cold season, however, is to couple the perfect mini with a pair of gorgeous warm tights and long boots. For fabulous designs try Wolford, their tights come in all shapes and sizes, colors and designs.

So, no matter what shape, size, color or design, your legs happen to be, why not take a short-skirted walk on the wild side this year.

Police Blotter

East Hampton Town Police reported a "repeat" crime this past week. The Gone Fishing Marina in East Hampton was the scene of a burglary sometime between last Friday and Tuesday. Similar to a theft committed no more than a month ago at the marina, someone boarded a 30 foot Rampage Sport Fisherman and ripped the display panel from its console. The owner told police it was worth about $3,500. Police are still investigating.

On the sleepier side of local crime news.... The manager of the Amagansett Mobil Station in Amagansett arrived to open the store last Saturday and found an unpleasant surprise. Someone had broken a large pane of glass from the front door. The manager soon found out that the person who had broken the glass was asleep in the stock room. He quietly called police who soon arrived to wake the man up. Police arrested the man and charged him with criminal trespass in the third degree.

A Harrison Avenue man called police one early Wednesday morning a few weeks ago when his wife said she heard footsteps in the driveway and the sound of closing doors. When police arrived nothing was found to be stolen until the next morning when he realized his prized Budweiser cooler and a green extension ladder were gone.

After an argument with a lady friend last Wednesday, a Pheasant Woods Lane man realized his watch, a gold ring and two sets of car keys were missing. When police arrived, the lady friend was moving her suitcase and the man's watch fell out. She was charged with criminal possession of stolen property.

CHARGED UP
Dear Dan,
I was shocked last week when I noticed LIPA installing a pole line at Long Beach between Noyack and North Haven. It seems they are disregarding regulations set up between their predecessor Long Island Lighting Company (LILCO) and the Public Service Commission (PSC). The PSC required New York State public utilities to establish a fund to eliminate overhead pole lines near or adjacent to waterways known as Visually Sensitive Resources (VSR). Now, LIPA who claims to be following the rules of the LILCO tariff ignores the VSR requirement and are rebuilding this ugly pole line. Southampton Town probably knew about this regulation when they recently built comfort stations at Long Beach and at additional costs installed underground electric services. Now with this new pole line, these underground electric services were a waste of taxpayer's money and will continue to be serviced from an overhead system.
I also have a concern that overhead pole lines may be polluting our ground water and waterways with creosote seeping from the poles. The EPA has found that creosote is a possible human carcinogen.
Because LIPA does not have a regulator such as the PSC, I suggest you intercede and stop this insidious pole line and force them to install their existing overhead lines at Long Beach to underground.

GHOST STORIES
Dear Dan,
On behalf of the Southampton Inn. Thank you so much for your splendid, spooky, scary reading on Saturday evening. We had over seventy listeners, all spooked and delighted. And it was extra special for me – this is the "Hamptons" as I remember with beach bonfires, boom box and families sharing stories under a crisp autumn sky...
All the best for a healthy, happy, peaceful, New Year.

Dede Gotthelf (Moan)

YANKEE SEE, YANKEE DO
Dear Dan,
In this World Series time of the year, faith and baseball come into play. Andy Petite of the New York Yankees says he places God first in his life. This is interesting. If the world knew this the world would change.

Love,
Paula Timpson

ANOTHER SATISFIED CUSTOMER
Dear Dan,
Your stories always make me laugh whenever I come out to the Hamptons. I just saw that your son David published his first book. Congratulations! Keep up the good work.

continue to be available online at www.MonicaValentineNY.com. Monica has poured her soul into these silk pink bags in hopes that they can make a difference. They cost $35, and ten dollars of every bag sold will be donated to the Coalition.

Other groups including Absolute Best Care, Inc., an agency based out of New York and New Jersey that places nannies, babysitters and housekeepers out on the East End, also feel it is important to help out for Breast Cancer Awareness Month. The organization prides itself on helping families with an immense sensitivity to women and their needs. They are donating ten percent of each placement from the month of October.

If you would like to get involved or make a donation for the battle against breast cancer, you can contact the American Cancer Society at 1-800-ACS-2345 or look for more information at www.cancer.org.
